The daughter of Mrs. Nola Nasworthy, Stacy Mitchell is a Virginia Beach native, plans to travel either North or West. "I like it here at the Beach," Mitchell said, "there are a lot of things to do, and I love the sand and surf. But I will not settle in Virginia Beach. I would like to go to California or New York to be a fashion model." Mitchell lives in the Ocean Park section of Virginia Beach and graduated from Bayside High School. Her hobbies include swimming and tennis. Her special interests are modeling and photography. The Three Ships Inn is her favorite dining spot; and Rogue's and Country Comfort are her favorite nightspots.

Cavalier Hotel—A tradition, over 50 years old

"The Cavalier contributes vastly to the image of the Virginia Beach community," said Cavalier resident manager John Hendriksen.

"Combined with the new facility across the street," he added, "the Cavalier is the largest resort inn at the Beach. We have a total of 407 rooms for rent between the two locations."

Built in 1927, the Cavalier rests nobly on 16 acres of land at 42nd Street and Pacific Avenue. Its counterpart, the new oceanfront Cavalier, is right across the street. The original Cavalier features 127 rooms, plus other resort activities for its guests.

"All rooms are ready to be rented," Hendriksen said.

"Most of our guests," he continued, "are from out of town; and we cater to many conventions. The local Beach residents like to frequent our lounge, The Hunt Room.

"The hotel hosts many local functions, such as wedding receptions, and special affairs, but we don't deny we attract a lot of tourists.

"In addition to nice rooms, and the ocean, we also offer our guests other benefits, such as, a full time director of activities; provisions for childrens' recreation; tennis courts, and two swimming pools."

The Cavalier is open year round. Rooms range in price from $44 to $54 a night.

For those who like a pool under the sun, the new Cavalier features one right next to the ocean.

Leaves musty odor

Beach humidity causes mildew

By ANNIE P. GILMER

VPI extension agent

Mildew is a problem in this area where humidity is high. Molds which cause mildew are always in the air but need moisture to grow.

Mildew leaves a musty odor, discolors fabrics, sometimes causing them to rot. Molds develop most often on cotton, linen, rayon, silk, wool, leather, wood and paper. Damp, dark, warm and poorly aired cellars, crawl spaces, clothes closets; draperies and rugs in basements; shower curtains; clothes stored when damp and/or dirty are all perfect environments for mildew growth.

The spread of mildew in moist environments can be prevented and/or remedied with water-proofing, ventilation and suds and water care.

Control causes of dampness. Replace cracked or defective mortar around a house. Check that drainage is adequate. Consider waterproofing concrete and other masonry walls above ground. Seal absorbent brick and other surfaces. Prevent moisture from entering crawl spaces by spreading a layer of moisture-barrier material over the soil under the building.

Good ventilation helps remove moisture. When outside air is drier than inside air, it absorbs excess moisture. When outside air is drier than inside air, it absorbs excess moisture. Use an electric fan to circulate air, if natural breezes are not sufficient. Air conditioners take up warm air, cool it and circulate the cool air back into the room. A dehumidifier helps control humidity. When using an air conditioner or dehumidifier, keep windows and doors closed.

If the house is very damp, turning the heat on for a short time may help. Then open doors and windows to let moist air out. A light burned in a closet helps dry this area.

Keep area clean

Keep closets, dresser drawers, basements, bathrooms and other susceptible areas as clean as possible. The method will depend on the surface. Some may require regular care with detergent or soap suds; others need special cleaners.

Prevent mildew growth on home furnishings, and clothing. Store garments and furnishings only when clean and dry! Even many man-made fibers which resist mildew must be kept clean; soil on them, under the right conditions, can start mildew growth on other fabrics.

Water repellent sprays, mildew inhibitors, fungicides and chemicals to absorb moisture help keep fabrics and surfaces moisture and mold free. Available in department, drug or building supply stores, these are sold under various trade names. Always use according to directions and keep out of the reach of children and pets.

Mildew tips

Some tips to remember on mildew.

What if mildew has already appeared in your home? If there is mildew on clothing or household fabrics, remove spots as soon as discovered before mold can weaken materials. Begin by brushing off mold outdoors so mildew spores do not scatter in the house. On washable fabrics, pretreat by rubbing detergent into the dampened stain. Then launder the items in hot water and chlorine bleach, if safe for fabric, and detergent or soap. Should stain remain, sponge with hydrogen peroxide. Rinse and launder. If not bleach safe, soak items in an oxygen bleach according to directions. Then wash. Take non-washables to the dry cleaner; identify the stain.

Upholstered pieces, mattresses, rugs and carpets need to be treated differently since mildew can penetrate deeply. When possible, start by taking the mildewed item outside and brush mold away with a broom. Using the upholstery attachment of a vacuum cleaner, run it over the surface to draw out more mold. Remember, mold spores are going into the vacuum, so dispose of bag or sweepings outside to avoid scattering mold spores.

If the article is still damp, dry it with an electric heater or fan. Sun and air thoroughly to stop mold growth. If mildew remains on upholstered furniture, wipe it with a cloth wrung out of a dilute alcohol solution (1 cup denatured or rubbing alcohol to 1 cup water). Dry the article thoroughly. Sponge mildewed rugs and carpets with a rug shampoo, or use an electric shampoo machine. If possible, let the article dry in the sun.

Wipe mildew from leather with a cloth wrung out of a dilute alcohol solution. Dry in a current of air; use a fan for better circulation. If mildew remains, wash with saddle soap. Wipe with a damp cloth; dry in an airy place.

Flooding and humidity can cause excessive mildew problems. Be prepared by water-proofing, ventilating and keeping a home clean. If mildew does cause trouble, fresh air and suds help rid furnishings and clothing of the pesky mold!

For more detailed information on removing mildew contact the Virginia Beach Cooperative Extension Service for publication #643, How to Prevent and Remove Mildew.

Fourteen year Virginia Beach school board member Mrs. Reva Kelberg.

Discusses problems of Beach schools

By GREG GOLDFARB, editor,
The Virginia Beach Sun

"I like Virginia Beach very much," said Beach school board member Reva Kelberg.

"I can walk my dog at night and not have to worry about being attacked; and during the day, there is always something to do thanks to the city's fine parks and recreation department."

Kelberg feels comfortable living in Virginia Beach. She also feels comfortable on the school board, of which she has been a member since 1966.

Serving since 1966

"I was appointed to the board by city council three years after the merger of the city and Princess Anne County," Kelberg, 45, recalls.

"Right after I came on the board, three year appointment terms were set up, and we had to draw lots to see who would be the first ones up for reappointment."

Fourteen years is a relatively long time, but last December, Kelberg was appointed for another three year term. She says she continues to serve because of her personal commitment to education.

"I don't serve on the school board for any political reasons," the University of Pennsylvania graduate said, "I just have a deep commitment to quality education and Virginia Beach has that quality."

"The city has a terrific school system, leading the local area."

"There may be one or two school systems in the Northern part of Virginia, however, which may be a little better."

Kelberg, one of 10 other school board members, works well with the group, because they all keep the best interest of Virginia Beach in mind during school board meetings.

"We have a large board," she said, "but for 11 members to work as well together as we do is not only good for the city, but for the parents and children.

Beach school board member

"All the school board members want the best education possible for our children, at the least expense possible for the local taxpayers. But it's hard to manage a good school system in such a fast growing city. We try to build enough schools to keep up with the increasing growth of Virginia Beach, but we are careful not to build too much."

Local support mixed

Kelberg said that over the years, the school board has had the support, and lack of support of the local community. For example, the school board wanted the community to support an $18.4 million bond referendum back in 1970, but it was defeated on the general ballot.

"We wanted the money to build a new multi-story high school in Bayside, and one at the North end of the Beach," Kelberg said, "both were to include swimming pools because we had an idea to start a program where every child in Virginia Beach would learn to swim. With all the water around, we didn't want to see any drownings that could have been prevented."

"But the public turned us down. They said we didn't need more schools, which their tax money would pay for; instead, the public urged the city to curtail home building. Many people got very emotional about it. They argued that after years and years of paying taxes, it would be the newcomers to the Beach that would reap the most benefits."

But Kelberg said that ordeal gave the board creditability.

"We were defeated then," Kelberg said, "but it made us, and the local residents, sit up and take notice of what was going on around us."

"We (the school board) set up a series of six public hearings to determine what course we would take in controlling, or learning to accommodate the city's increasing population, in terms of providing schools."

"Out of the hearings, came three basic propositions: To have school year round, with students attending classes for 45 days and giving them 15 off; offer school at night; or build some bare bone schools. We did all three, but with questionable results."

"We started a two year program, instituting the 45/15 day proposal. Everybody supported it, but no one wanted their own children participating in it. The night school was cancelled because only four students signed up for it."

The school board tried to get another referendum passed in 1973, for the amount of $12 or 13 million. It was passed, thus the advent of the Kempsville, Independence, and Lynnhaven Junior High Schools."

Kelberg said the pilot programs were checked by experts, and the experiments yielded the following results:

"Three experts analyzed the data collected the programs, and produced masses of documentation. The main thing we learned was that even though the 45/15 program wasn't popular, you could place more students in school with a limited number of facilities."

Keeping up with growth

The school board will never call for a bond referendum, according to Kelberg, because of city council appropriations.

But the city does still have some problems.

"Growth is always a problem," Kelberg relates. "It's hard to keep the right number of students in a limited amount of schools, and still keep our local and state school accreditation."

"Handicapped students also cause much debate, as to whether they should be in classrooms with perfectly healthy children, or if they should be in special classes."

"The Federal law says they must not be kept in separate classes, and we will comply with the law, but I think it should be a decision left up to the parents. Sometimes a handicapped child in a normal classroom can have an effect on that child's personal feelings, and ego. It's a touchy question, but I think we need to look at the whole situation."

A Norfolk resident

Kelberg is originally a Norfolk resident. She has been married 25 years, after this summer, to Beach attorney Lee Kelberg. They live in the Thalia section of the city and have two children: Sharon, 23, a graduate student at the University of Rhode Island, studying marine affairs; and Jeffrey, 21, in his fourth year at the University of Virginia, studying pre law.

The daughter of Norfolk produce merchants, Kelberg's maiden name is Friedman. She attended

J.E.B. Stuart Elementary School, Blair Junior High School, and graduated from Maury High School in 1953.

In high school, Kelberg was active in student government, and the Spanish Club.

"I remember the year I graduated very well," she recalls, "it was the year Stalin died, and we were all elated."

Kelberg received an A.A. degree from the College of William and Mary (Norfolk Division), and in 1957 received a B.A. in English from the University of Pennsylvania.

She met her husband, however, in 1954 while Lee was a legal officer in the United States Navy.

"He wasn't thrilled about the service," she (See KELBERG page 7)

Virginia Beach police officers recently participated in basic traffic exercises, under the supervision of the Tidewater Regional Criminal Justice Academy.

Cities and institutions participating directing traffic at the intersection of Laskin Road and Arctic Avenue included Virginia Beach; Portsmouth; Old Dominion University, Norfolk; and the Norfolk Naval Shipyard.

"This is a street drill exercise," said H. T. Carr, Beach officer supervising the activity.

"We teach them how to deal with different traffic situations by cutting off the street lights and putting the officer right in the middle of the road!"

After college and getting married, Kelberg came to Virginia Beach in 1957 to take up his professional practice.

"I was expecting a child at that time," Kelberg recalls with a gleam in her eye, and "we built a home in Thalia Manor and lived in it 10 years. Then we built our present house."

Kelberg just recently completed her master's degree work in English at Old Dominion University, Norfolk, and will take her comprehensive exams in December.

Into the shadows where we could confide.

I needed the quiet tho at first I rebelled
But gently, so gently, my cross He upheld
And whispered so sweetly of

To heights never dreamed of when

He loved me so greatly He drew me away.

I needed the quiet. No prison my bed,

1979 Traffic fatalities

Beach leads in deaths

In 1979, more people died on Virginia Beach roads than any other city in the state.

Traffic fatalities totaled 42 last year for the Beach, followed by Roanoke with 13 less deaths than Virginia Beach, at 29. Also, compared to eight other cities in the state with populations over 50,000, Virginia Beach and Roanoke were the only ones to increase in the number of traffic deaths over 1978.

Beach visitors stand bewildered, wondering where the sand went.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Mother Nature continues to eat Beach shoreline

By GREG GOLDFARB, editor,
The Virginia Beach Sun

Virginia Beach is a strong, and powerful city. But even it can't stop Mother Nature.

Recently, the city has been experiencing unusually active wave action, which has stripped the beach away between 15th and 18th Streets. It is causing a real problem for the city, which is helpless to combat the ocean's destructive force.

Virginia Institute of Marine Science marine geologist, Gary Anderson, said the city has basically three options in dealing with severe erosion.

"Most seaside communities have experienced similar problems with erosion," Anderson said,

"In fact, some cities, like Miami, have had to place artificial barriers, called groins, on the shoreline. Usually they are heavy steel, wood, or stone structures; but I'm not suggesting that is what Virginia Beach needs, but they may.

"Secondly, the city can continue dumping tons of sand on the beach to replenish what the water has washed away. And thirdly, they can do nothing, and study the problem some more."

"I have been singing since I could talk," said SUNshine Girl Lora Davis.

"When I was a little girl, I used to sing and dance to Walt Disney music while watching myself in the mirror."

Lora, the 18 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Davis, is a 13 year Beach resident, and a 1980 graduate of Kellam High School.

She had the lead role in a local production of the musical "Grease," and has sung in local bands. In the future she plans to attend James Madison University.

"I'll eventually go to college at JMU or some place else in the mountains," she said, "but not for a year or two. I want to stay in Virginia Beach for a while longer, but I'm ready to relocate if I need to."

Lora's hobbies include singing, reading, learning to ride horseback, and "spending a lot of time at the beach. I like Beach people; it's an active city; and there's always something to do."

Her favorite Beach nightspots are Isle and Capri, and The Shack. Her favorite musical vocalists are Barbra Streisand, and Johnnie Mathis. Lora adds that she likes to sing all types of music except Country and Western.

"I like to sing because I think I'm good at it, and because I make people happy when I do it"—Davis

Lora enjoys singing, and has a special reason for doing it.

"I sing because I think I'm good at it," she said, "and because I make people happy when I do it. Also, the money isn't bad either."

of traffic deaths, but they do take extra measures to help handle the situation when they arise.

"There's no way we can tell when an accident is going to happen, or where it will happen, until after it does," Deanes explained.

"We rely on a selective enforcement unit, which specializes in handling traffic cases. They feed all the available information about the accident into a computer, and determine which areas, at which times, may become potentially dangerous traffic zones.

"After we have pinpointed the trouble areas, we patrol those areas religiously."

High speed, and drunks kill

High speeds and drunks, according to Deanes, cause most of traffic deaths. Virginia Beach, however, has one piece of equipment to help curtail the free wheeling boozers.

"The Virginia Beach police department obtained a mobile unit to test drivers about a year ago," Deanes said, "to see how much alcohol, if any, suspected D.U.I.'s (those driving under the influence of alcohol) have consumed.

"Now, all the officer has to do is detain the suspect and call the unit. It saves us hours compared to when we had to take every suspected D.U.I. back to the precinct for blood, or breath tests.

"We have been experiencing an increase in the number of drunk driving arrests we've made, and expect the number of traffic fatalities in 1980 to decrease when next year's report comes out."

Need more police power

Deanes said what the department needs to cut the number of Beach driving deaths even further, is more men.

"We need more manpower," he said, "to staff up more selective enforcement units. We need more people with radar patrols to catch the speeders. This is how we can keep the number of traffic deaths in Virginia Beach as low as possible.

"But whatever we do, traffic accidents will continue to happen. We can't explain it."

Unusual weather this year

An age old problem

Anderson said the crux of Virginia Beach's erosion problem is as old as time itself.

"What you're dealing with," he said, "are natural forces which can't be controlled. In general, sand is being displaced from the southern beaches to the northern ones. This, coupled with the sea level rise will cause the sand to constantly wash away. Gradually, over the years, the sea level has been steadily rising; so regardless of what the city does, it cannot stop it. In theory, after 1,000's of years the land will be covered with water. The whole boardwalk may have to be rebuilt, or turn it into a bulkhead.

"Nature tries to balance the sea level, the sand, and the land. But waves are the active agent, which act like a sawblade cutting away at the land. But with a saw, something advances the teeth. In this case, it is the sea level which is advancing the eroding waves to the shore."

Anderson said this year's severe erosion problem may be a product of this summer's unusual weather.

"Usually, most severe wind and wave action," Anderson explained, "occurs in the winter. But this year's weather patterns have been unique.

"The traditional attitude is that the beach is the shortest in the winter and the longest in the summer. But this year, the reverse is true.

"Distant sea storms and underwater currents affect the local shoreline like local storms affect the waves to make them choppy or smooth."

Beach has done well, so far

Anderson said Virginia Beach has done well for itself in erosion prevention, but the city still can do more.

"Basically, Virginia Beach has been very successful in dealing with its erosion problems," Anderson said, "especially for the amount of money they have spent.

"But, the city probably dumped its replenishing sand last spring too soon. If we have any late summer storms, a lot of sand will have been washed away before it gets here. Then, after the storm you would really see some erosion."

How are tourist affected?

The Kona Kai motel, which rests right beside the most eroded area of the beach, reports that the lack of beach has not hurt business.

"We're full tonight," a desk clerk who did not want to be identified said. "No sand should have an impact on our business, but so far I have seen no evidence of it."

Need public education

Finally, Anderson said one of the best things that can be done to help solve this problem, in addition to masses of sand, is public education.

"I think it's important that newspaper articles be written," he said, "so that people will take an interest; this is a saving grace. The more the people of Virginia Beach understand that Mother Nature is constantly shifting the sand around from False Cap to Fort Story, and not back again, the easier it will be for the community to reach consensus over what should be done."

MOTION FOR JUDGMENT

Plaintiff, the City of Virginia Beach Development Authority (the "Authority"), seeks judicial determination pursuant to Article 6, Chapter 5, Title 15.1 Code of Virginia of 1950, as amended, of the validity of up to $1,500,000 Industrial Development Revenue Bonds (Rose Hall Company Facility) Series of 1980 (the "Bonds"), to be issued to pay the costs of acquiring, constructing, and equipping an office building facility (the "Facility"), in the City of Virginia Beach, Virginia, to be leased or sold to Rose Hall Company, a Virginia general partnership (the "Company") and states as follows:

1. The Authority was duly created by Chapter 643, 1964 Acts of Assembly, as amended, of the Commonwealth of Virginia (the "Act"), and is a political subdivision of the Commonwealth of Virginia. 2. At a meeting called and held on July 1, 1980, the Authority adopted a resolution agreeing to undertake the issuance of the Bonds upon terms and conditions to be mutually agreed upon between the Authority and the Company, with the Facility to be leased or sold to the Company upon terms designed to assure payment of the Bonds by the Company in accordance with their terms and to provide security for the repayment thereof. The proceeds of the Bonds, when issued, will be used to finance the costs of acquiring, constructing, and equipping the Facility and the issuance of the Bonds.

3. When issued, the Bonds will be valid, legal and binding limited obligations of the Authority, payable solely from the revenues and receipts received from the lease or sale of the Facility to the Company and other security therefor. The Bonds will not constitute a debt or pledge of the faith and credit of the com-

v. Taxpayers, property owners and citizens of Virginia Beach including non-residents owning property or subject to taxation therein and all other persons interested in or affected in any way by the issuance by the City of Virginia Beach Development Authority of Approximately $900,000 Industrial Development Revenue Bonds (Wallbanger Associates Facility) Series of 1980., Defendants.

MOTION FOR JUDGMENT

Plaintiff, the City of Virginia Beach Development Authority (the "Authority"), seeks judicial determination pursuant to Article 6, Chapter 5, Title 15.1 Code of Virginia of 1950, as amended, of the validity of up to $900,000 Industrial Development Revenue Bonds (Wallbanger Associates Facility) Series of 1980 (the "Bonds"), to be issued to pay the costs of acquiring, constructing, and equipping a racquetball court club and associated health facilities (the "Facility"), in the City of Virginia Beach, Virginia, to be leased or sold to Wallbanger Associates, a Virginia partnership (the "Company") and states as follows:

1. The Authority was duly created by Chapter 643, 1964 Acts of Assembly, as amended, of the Commonwealth of Virginia (the "Act"), and is a political subdivision of the Commonwealth of Virginia. The Authority has been continuously organized and operating under the Act since its creation, and no dissolution proceedings pursuant to the Act have been adopted or instituted.

2. At a meeting called and held on July 1, 1980, the Authority adopted a resolution agreeing to undertake the issuance of the Bonds upon terms and conditions to be mutually agreed upon between the Authority and the company, with the Facility to be leased or sold to the Company upon terms designed to assure payment of the Bonds by the Company in accordance with their terms and to provide security for the repayment thereof. The proceeds of the Bonds, when issued, will be used to finance the costs of acquiring, constructing, and equipping the Facility and the issuance of the Bonds.

3. When issued, the Bonds will be valid, legal and binding limited obligations of the Authority, payable solely from the revenues and receipts received from the lease or sale of the Facility to the Company and other security therefor. The Bonds will not constitute a debt or a pledge of the faith and credit of the Commonwealth of Virginia or any political subdivision thereof, in-

Teen deaths in the U.S.

Automobile accidents are the number one killers of teens in the United States.

In 1977 alone, 2,184 girls in the 14 to 19 age group were killed and the statistics for boys are worse as their rate of death and injury is three times that for the girls.

Virginia Beach water shortage

Conservation ordered

Barring a good thunderstorm or two, Virginia Beach citizens can expect water conservation measures to be put into gear by the weekend.

City Council Monday afternoon authorized city manager George L. Hanbury and public utilities director Aubrey Watts to invoke conservation measures when necessary. The measures were put into the City Code in 1977 when the area's water supply was last threatened by drought.

Watts said that a good thundershower or two would take the city off the emergency list for the week, at least, but Council authorized Hanbury and Watts to take emergency measures just in case.

Norfolk, which furnishes the Beach's city water supply, last week asked its residents to voluntarily cut down on water use. The city of Portsmouth, which fared better than Norfolk during the 1977 drought, has already invoked emergency measures. Chesapeake which receives water from Portsmouth and Norfolk as well as from its own Northwest River Water Treatment Plant, has taken no measures to date and Council will be on vacation until August 19.

Watts said the city's first action would be to require voluntary conservation. If that does not save the necessary amounts of water mandatory restrictions will go into effect banning such things as watering lawns and washing cars. He said, however, that some of the restrictions which pertained in 1977 are not applicable now. For instance, he pointed out that all car washes at the Beach are recycling water whereas they were not in 1977. Also many other types of industry are recycling water now and most swimming pools recycle water. Only the filling of new swimming pools would be restricted under the conservation measures.

He said that the Norfolk system needs 70 to 80 million gallons of water a day including the Beach's 30 million gallons. However, the system can only move 60 to 70 million gallons a day through the pipelines out of the Nansemond water resources where there is no shortage of water. The remaining water has to come from the local Lake Smith and Lake Wright which are low.

He said that as soon as the public is aware of the problem, the demand could drop 10 million gallons a day.

The city ordinance provides for rationing if the water saving measures are not effective.

Mandatory measures include:

No watering of shrubbery, trees, lawns, etc. except from a watering can or other container not to exceed three gallons.

No washing automobiles, trucks, etc., except in a facility with a water recycling system approved by the city. A sign must be posted stating such a recycling system is in operation.

No washing sidewalks, streets, service station aprons, exterior of buildings or any outdoor surface except from a bucket or other container not to exceed three gallons.

No operation of any ornamental fountains.

No filling or refilling of swimming and/or wading pools. Replacement of water in pools to make up for evaporation will be permitted.

No use of fire hydrants except by governmental operations.

No wholesale serving of drinking water in restaurants, etc. except when requested by customer.

The restrictions do not apply to the use of private well water. Hanbury said in 1977 well users were asked to put signs up saying "well." Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr.

quipped, "And everybody had a sign."

Penalties for violation of the ordinance carry penalties of as much as $500 or the termination of water service.

In 1977 the measures were imposed on August 29. Restrictions were taken off on November 15.

Agenda offerings

Most of Virginia Beach City Council agendas are hefty documents running over 100 pages, some closer to 200 pages.

Council now is trying to decide whether to continue offering the agendas to the general public at no cost or to charge a fee for the agenda and mailing costs.

City clerk Ruth H. Smith has already started a policy of continuing to give all who want one, the shorter version of the agenda, but has cut down on distribution of the full version. She explained that most people are interested only in certain items, and in these cases, her office will give the complete background material on these specific items.

The practice, started a few weeks ago, has resulted in some complaints from the public.

In the past the city has been generous with its agendas, complete with background materials, maps, contents, Planning Commission minutes and the like. They were given to anyone who asked as long as the supply held out. Mrs. Hodges, said, however, that some citizens with a short form became upset because the person next to them had a full agenda.

The city pays 10 cents a page for the agendas and the $10 to $20 documents are often left behind in the Council Chambers.

Some agendas have been mailed to people and organizations that request one at no charge.

At the clerk's request, Council recently appointed a committee consisting of Patrick L. Standing, Reid Ervin and Barbara Henley to study the needs of the office.

Until the recommendations of the committee are received the Clerk's office will continue its practice of limiting the number of full agendas but making available full reports on specific items and adequate supplies of shorter agendas.

New water sources

The cities of Virginia Beach and Chesapeake, which are both trying to find new water sources, are getting together to discuss the problem.

Chesapeake Mayor Sidney M. Oman last week appointed a Council committee which he hoped would work with a Virginia Beach committee on the problem.

Virginia Beach Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr. appointed the Beach committee Monday afternoon at Oman's request.

Virginia Beach is completely dependent on Norfolk for its water supply and is currently undertaking a desalting project with the help of federal funds. Chesapeake gets its water from Norfolk and Portsmouth and from its own treatment plant at the Northwest River.

Both cities are interested in regional sources. Councilman Reid Ervin said that he hopes the committee will not work at cross purposes with the Southeastern Regional Planning District which is looking for a regional source.

Fashions focus on females

By CATE TUTTLE

Special to the Sun

Each year, fashion magazines focus on a different part of the female body. Enthusiastically, they swoon, "If you've always loved the off-the-shoulder look, this is your year!" or, "Those with small waists will want to go all out this spring." Yet in spite of these isolations, any woman old enough to have been through a few summers knows that every year is a leg year.

With summer here, you may say it's too late to get your legs in better shape. However, you can visibly tone legs in just one month, and if you work at it, your legs can improve right along with your tan! An added plus—the following leg exercises can fit right in with something else you're already doing.

Fortunately, one of the best leg exercises is very easy. You can do it anytime you are standing still. Simply squeeze tight the muscles of your buttocks and thighs for approximately three seconds and then relax. Great for outer and inner thighs and the buttocks, this alternate tensing and relaxing should be done as many times as possible whenever you think of it. While you're sitting, you can adapt this exercise by repeatedly tensing one thigh and then the other. This is marvelous for reducing fat and firming the long muscles on the back of the leg.

Add flexibility and shape to your calves while standing by raising one leg slightly and rotating the ankle in each direction. Follow by tensing one calf and then the other. Remember, intermittent tensing and relaxing is ideal for keeping weight down and toning.

Work on legs

At the beach, you can work on your legs while soaking up the sun. To firm inner thighs, stand with feet wide-apart and slowly push them against the sand; moving feet toward each other as you do, by pointing first the toes inward and then the heels.

Alternate back and forth, pushing toes and heels against the sand until your feet are almost together. Done right, you will finish with a little pile of sand between your feet.

When you walk on the beach, slowly push the sand with your toes. This is great for firming. You can also tone legs by walking in knee-deep surf. The water resistance acts like weights and gives you lots of exercise in a short time.

While sunning poolside, lie stomach-down on your towel, propped up on your elbows. As you read or listen to the radio, do leg lifts. Remember, keep your knees straight. Then turn over on your side, once again prop up on your elbow and move your free leg up and down with a scissor motion. Then make circles with toes first pointed and then flexed. Now kick your leg back and up to really get a workout on your buttocks and outer thighs. Switch sides and repeat.

Greg Goldfarb—Sun

"Living in Virginia Beach is like living in two cities," said six year Virginia Beach resident Dan McNamara. "In the summer the Beach is fast paced, and active. Whereas, in the winter months it's quiet and very placid." McNamara, a Michigan native, is employed with the Virginia Beach postal system. He has studied psychology at the Beach campus of Tidewater Community College, but left school to work full time. He enjoys all sports, particularly racquetball. His special interests include music. McNamara enjoys dining at the Ringside Restaurant; and dancing at the Cape Henry Club. He is single, and lives in the resort section of Virginia Beach.

Greg Goldfarb—Sun

Every Sunday local residents venture out to the burrow pit near the F.O.P. Lodge. It is posted: Not Trespassing; and has been the scene of several drownings in recent years.

Water may be friend, and enemy

By GREG GOLDFARB, editor,
The Virginia Beach Sun

"The key to preventing drownings in Virginia Beach," said Virginia Beach aquatic coordinator Alice Striffler, "is teaching local residents to swim, and respect the water."

Since 1970 reported drownings in Virginia Beach total 124, which according to Striffler is not exceedingly high.

"For the amount of water in and around this area," she said, "124 drownings in 10 years is not that many. But don't get me wrong. It's a sad thing whenever anybody drowns; it's a shame."

Drownings hard to prevent

Drownings, like murders, are impossible to predict and very hard to prevent. Anyone can drown, according to the situation.

"People of different ages, and swimming abilities drown everyday," Striffler said, "it really depends on the situation."

"For example, many people drown at the beginning of the warm weather season because they overestimate their swimming abilities."

"Some people panic in the water when emergencies arise, like when a boat is sinking and the victim's first reaction is to get to safety. They will jump overboard and swim toward the shore. But, unless that person knows his abilities, they run a high risk of drowning before they reach it."

"In general, many drownings occur because of people's negligence, or their own stupidity"—Striffler

"I also know of another example, a bit unique, where a 55 year old man was floating on a rubber raft, had a heart attack, fell in the water and drowned. Nothing could have been done to prevent such an incident."

As the chart indicates, many drownings occur in the ocean waters; but many drownings also occur in lifeguard supervised swimming pools.

"In the ocean," Striffler said, "swimmers and non-swimmers alike have to contend with strong undertow currents, winds, and sometimes rip tides."

"Many times tourists from the North or Mid-West have no conception whatsoever to such phenomenon. Even if you explain it, they still don't understand. Many times those are the ones who drown in the ocean."

"But, on the other hand, many drownings, or at least potentially fatal accidents may occur in supervised swimming pools because of the diving board. People will dive in on top of each other; or, people will dive in, hit the bottom, and break their necks."

"In general, many drownings occur because of people's negligence, or their own stupidity. People must learn to respect the water, and understand its potential danger. That's why Virginia Beach offers swimming classes year round for small children all the way up to senior citizens."

Community not aware

Striffler said basically, the Virginia Beach community is not water safety conscious enough; and therein lies the reason for many needless drownings.

"Parents don't understand the dangers of the water and it's ironic," Striffler said. "Because Virginia Beach kids are exposed to water everyday of their lives; everywhere they go.

"In addition to the obvious ocean and lakes which abound in this area, every time a new residential subdivision goes up there is usually a man-made burrow pit which accompanies it. And if for some reason a pit is not made by contractors, man-made lakes or ponds are dug for visual appearance and beautification.

"Many times, with the amount of water around, parents will send their children out to play and have no idea where they do. It's a good way to get the youngsters out of their hair for a few hours. Instead, the parents should take their children to one of the numerous community pools and enjoy the water with them. I'm sure this would cut the number of drowning of young children."

Burrow pits dangerous

Burrow pits, which are numerous in Virginia Beach as well as other cities, have been the cause of many drownings in recent years. They are unsupervised, and not considered a clean, healthy swimming environment.

Striffler states that in her opinion, the pits should be fenced in and closed off from public access.

"Burrow pits are dangerous," Striffler said, "they should be put off limits to everyone for swimming. People know they don't belong in them, but many times people without much sense swim in them. And sometimes, they drown."

One particular burrow pit, near the Fraternal Order of Police Lodge at the intersection of Birdneck Road and General Booth Boulevard, has been the scene of several drownings in years past. Although it is posted with no trespassing signs, it is owned by a private individual and the no trespassing signs around it are not enforced by local police.

Burrow pits look like fun, but may be deadly.

Vehicles traverse ruts and holes to get to pit.

"Burrow pits are dangerous, they should be put off limits to everyone for swimming. People know they don't belong in them"—Striffler "That burrow pit does not belong to the police department," said Virginia Beach police sergeant D. C. Watson, "even though it is within a half mile of the F.O.P. lodge.

"There are no trespassing signs up around it, but we don't enforce them for two reasons.

"First of all, we don't get complaints about it because the owner does not live near it. He is a private individual who spends a lot of time in Europe. Secondly, getting to the pit to patrol it is so difficult, that we don't even take our four wheel drive vehicles back there."

Residents must learn safety

In essence, local law enforcement authorities and city employees seem helpless to deter swimmers from swimming anywhere they please. But it is not the water in itself that is dangerous. People who can't swim well bring the danger upon themselves when they enter it.

"We must teach the residents of Virginia Beach water safety," Striffler said, "but we must use the right technique.

"There is too much water in and around Virginia Beach for the local authorities to patrol regularly for swimmers who may drown themselves. If people, including individual residents and parents, don't take the time and have the initiative to teach themselves, and their children to swim, what can we do. The instructional services are there for those who want to learn to swim to do so. But you'd be surprised how many people don't even know the city sponsors swim classes for local residents all the time.

"People call us everyday asking about classes and are surprised to learn that we offer as much as we do. Again, the instructional services are there for the people who would just take advantage of them."

Should swimmers be allowed to swim in unsupervised areas, and die?

By GREG GOLDFARB, editor,
The Virginia Beach Sun

As early as 1971, the Virginia Beach school board proposed a public referendum which would make it mandatory for all children in Virginia Beach to learn to swim; but it was defeated. The local taxpayers did not deem water safety worthy of their hard earned dollars.

Goldfarb

At that time, according to school board member Reva Kelberg, the only thing close to a public swimming pool was located at the Cavalier Hotel, which according to Kelberg, "wasn't the best facility in the world to learn to swim." (The Kempsville recreation center with a 50 meter pool did not open until May, 1976.)

Today, Virginia Beach residents may learn to swim at the Kempsville center, as well as the Bow Creek recreation center. In addition, the city utilizes local apartment complex pools to conduct swim classes.

During the Summer, the Kempsville recreation center has slots available for 1840 swim students. But according to local swim instructors, only about three fourths of the slots are filled annually. Evening classes, however, are usually filled. For the city's fourth graders, there are 820 slots annually for swim students between two locations; neither of which have been used to capacity.

Virginia Beach has attempted to fill a "void," which according to Kelberg, the school board attempted to fill with the attempted passage of the early bond referendum. Since then, Beach officials have recognized the dangers of water to the inexperienced swimmer, and have been attempting to deal with a problem which takes the lives of Virginia Beach residents every year.

"It never hurts to teach a person to swim," Kelberg said, "even if that person has no plans to swim regularly. There are many water activities at the Beach, and many time parents will take if for granted that their children will learn to swim."

"In the past, local civic groups, or local Parent/Teacher Associations (PTA's) have sent their children to the Norfolk Y.M.C.A. or to the Boys' Club for swimming instruction before there were any facilities for swim instruction at the Beach."

"Now, however, we still have drownings; some by tourists, some by local residents. The tourists can't be controlled, but we should be able to take measures to keep our kids from jumping into burrow pits. The pits would not be dangerous if the children knew how to swim."

"We must teach people that water can be both a friend, and an enemy. Water can be fun, but many times people don't know their limitations, and they over-extend themselves and drown."

"Everyone needs to know water safety: Adults and children. And with the number of instructional swim services available to Beach residents, there is no reason for people not to be able to understand the water, enjoy the water, and stay alive."

According to local swim authorities, even though the ocean ranks number one in taking the lives of swimmers annually, it is not the fault of local lifeguards. They are reportedly well trained, and drilled regularly for competence. But with the miles and miles of shoreline around Virginia Beach, and the throngs of people who swim at the city's beaches, by the law of averages, someone will drown.

In terms of ratios, city ordinance dictates that swimming pools must have one lifeguard per 75 swimmers. The Kempsville pool has five lifeguards per 80 swimmers. On the beaches, it is only a guess how many people come under the purview of each lifeguard.

We can't expect lifeguards to act like Gods and protect the non-swimmers who do not have enough sense to protect themselves. Likewise, it is hard to protect those who try to commit suicide for example, from killing themselves if they want to, even though it is against the law.

As long as people are allowed to swim, people will drown. Just like as long as people continue to drive, there will always continue to be traffic fatalities. The only difference is, that licensed drivers are supposed to know their, and the car's limitations. Swimming doesn't require a license. It should.

City council should enact an ordinance which would outlaw swimmers from swimming in unsupervised areas, such as secluded lakes, and burrow pits. But, there's always those who will insist, "don't tell me where to swim;" just like there are those who will insist, "don't tell me I can't take my own life, by suicide."

It's sad. For those inexperienced swimmers who end up drowning, or those who deliberately kill themselves, they never seem to suffer. It's only we, the survivors who suffer, after they've fulfilled their selfish desires and are gone.

Parks and Recreation will sponsor mass swim registration in Pembroke, Sept. 16-20.

Virginia Beach residents by the city", Striffler said, "there is no reason why anyone living at the Beach not be able to swim. But, of course, I'm very pro swimming. I want to encourage as many people as I can to learn to swim. But the important thing to remember so that they must learn to swim properly, using the right teaching techniques.

"I mean, don't take your child to the shoreline and throw them in and expect them to learn to swim on their own. That's a big mistake. Instead, bring them to professionals who know how to orient children to the water slowly and correctly."

Don't swim alone!

In light of the fact that swimmers, as well as non-swimmers drown annually, Striffler reminds Virginia Beach residents of two tried and true rules for swimmers:

"First, don't swim alone," she said.

"I've been swimming for a long time and I still will not swim without someone along with me."

"And secondly, don't under any condition swim in any unsupervised areas, such as man-made lakes or burrow pits."

Register for swim classes

The Virginia Beach Department of Parks and Recreation is sponsoring mass registration for swim classes Sept. 16 through 20 at Pembroke Mall. All Beach residents, regardless of age, are invited and encouraged to sign up!

SUNSHINE GIRL

Wall used to deliver The SUN

"I used to deliver The Sun when I was 13 years old," said SUNshine girl Laurie Wall, "but after only doing it for six months, I was let go because they started mailing the papers out."

"I remember I used to make $13 for putting the papers in my little bicycle basket and taking them around the neighborhood. It was fun."

Wall, the 18 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kermit F. Wall, has always enjoyed reading The Sun, and thought it would be fun to be a SUNshine girl.

"My family subscribes to The Sun," the 1980 Bayside High School graduate said, "and I've been watching the SUNshine girls every week."

"I thought it would be neat to be one, so, one day when I had gone to King's Dominion, my mother called The Sun office and set up an appointment for me. I agreed to do it because it would be a good experience for me, and I wanted to see what it was like."

At Bayside, Wall was president of the Keyette Club; and active on various school committees, such as, prom, graduation, and homecoming.

In the Fall, she plans to attend the American Business and Fashion Institute, Charlotte, North Carolina, to study fashions.

Wall has one brother, Robert, 22, who attends officer cadet school in Newport, Rhode Island. She and her family live in the Lake View Shores section of Virginia Beach.

Her hobbies include water skiing, swimming, and going to the beach.

Her favorite Beach restaurant is Orion's Roof; and favorite nightspot is Peabody's.

Wall said even though she will go away to school soon, she will return to Virginia Beach.

"I love this area," she said, "and I plan to come back here as soon as I can. There is always plenty of things to do here. I like the people, and the change of seasons."

Laurie Wall enjoys playing the piano.

When income over $2,500

City Council must disclose

By LEE CAHILL

Sun City Council correspondent

The long-awaited disclosure law, considered and reconsidered, chewed on but not quite digested, has finally been approved by Virginia Beach City Council by a vote of 9-2.

Voting against the ordinance were Councilman Clarence A. Holland who noted, "I haven't seen any turn into a better or worse government because of the 'sunshine' laws," and Mayor J. Henry McCoy, Jr., who didn't like the idea of being called on the carpet before the Personnel Board, a creation of City Council.

The "preamble" to the ordinance gives as a reason for the ordinance, a way to enhance public confidence in the workings of government as well as in the elected and appointed officials.

Councilman Barbara Henley and Councilman John A. Baum put the ordinance together with the help of city attorney Dale Bimson and contributions from other Council members.

The disclosure ordinance covers members of the City Council, the planning commission and the city manager, city attorney, city clerk, real estate assessor, director of planning, director of public works, director of finance, director of economic development, director of permits and inspections and director of public utilities.

They will have to file a disclosure form showing interests of themselves and their immediate families living in the same household in real estate and sources of income where the income is over $2,500 from one source.

They will also be required to list gifts in excess of $100 from persons other than the immediate family in or outside the same household, and other than political contributions reported under general law.

The ordinance calls for the Personnel Board to administer and enforce the ordinance.

Henley pointed out that any body Council selects to administer the ordinance would be a Council-appointed body.

Baum added that Personnel Board has never been considered political or partisan and "would seldom be used, in my opinion."

Holland said he had problems with the ordinance although he had nothing against it or anything to hide. He said it may backfire in that people who are qualified may be discouraged by the form.

Baum said he didn't know that it would do any good. Councilman Reid Ervin noted that ironically, the "Sunshine" or open government laws are passed areas where there is no need for them.

Councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf said, "We're the closest government to the people. Let's go the extra mile to assure them... I have yet to hear anyone who isn't convinced that everybody in elective office isn't on the take...I'm tired of having someone...throwing up at you that someone's making money out of this." She added that it may be embarrassing for some, who have nothing to put on them, to fill out the forms.

Holland pointed out that where else do the people know you and your business better than right in your own hometown.

Councilman Patrick L. Standing said he wagered that the first time this ordinance is used is where someone inadvertently neglects to put $2,500 in income on the form.

Unlike other legislators, Oberndorf said that no Council member receives gifts or honorariums for speaking or offers of free trips.

Baum lashed at the hypocrisy of the Legislature which passed the Freedom of Information Act but excluded members of the General Assembly.

Oberndorf said that passing the ordinance would make Council "stand taller."

Ervin said it's still a question of trust. If this convinces one more person, it's worth it, he said. "I don't think anyone will forget $2,500."

Our own referendum

Virginia Beach City Council is calling for an advisory referendum involving the homosexual publication Our Own but is planning to make sure Council is not placed in the same position again.

Supporters of the question which will be on the referendum want to keep Our Own out of Virginia Beach's public libraries. The publication had been distributed from the Public Library until church groups objected. Now one copy is permitted in the reference section, but the opposition doesn't want any copies in the library.

But whatever the citizens decide in november, Council is not bound to take any action. Some members think a referendum which can result in no action is useless.

The question, which received the required number of signatures, is:

"Shall publications whose primary purpose is to depict or advocate by picture or word, homosexual acts be displayed, distributed or received into the public libraries of the city of Virginia Beach?"

Council Monday afternoon by a vote of 10-1 called for the referendum because it was required to do so by law but added a section stating that "The forwarding of this resolution shall constitute neither endorsement nor rejection of the question drafted by the petitioners."

Council also voted unanimously to look at the particular charter provision referring to advisory referendums at the time Council considers Charter changes with the idea of changing the section.

Councilman John A. Baum, who voted for the addition of the section but voted against the resolution calling for the referendum, said that he did not understand "the necessity of the General Assembly passing such a law and then making it mandatory that we vote on the law. I don't know of any place where we're forced to vote yes."

He said it was ridiculous and uncalled for and preferred that the whole council vote the resolution down and make it a court test. "There are a lot of uncomfortable things about this job and I have had people try to tell me how to vote and that's never been successful. I rather we fought it...it looks like something passed hastily."

The item was on the consent agenda, a group of generally routine items considered with one vote, but was removed at the request of Baum for discussion.

Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr. said that one person had signed up to speak on the item, but this is not permitted with consent agenda items.

City attorney Dale Bimson said that the code allowed Council no leeway and required it to call the referendum.

Councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf said that since the city was bound to approve the referendum, she suggested the addition explaining Council's position because "those were not the words of Council on the petition."

McCoy agreed with Baum that the law "does put us in an awkward position."

Councilman Patrick L. Standing said that he had a problem with referendums. "We can't run the government by referendums. It concerns me very much that we are on the road to a court test."

Councilman Reid Ervin said that the weakness in the code provision is that it's advisory. Why put citizens to the expense of a referendum when it's only advisory? he asked.

Councilman Clarence Holland agreed.

Councilman Donald Merrick pointed out that the citizens were "going to have quite a few levers to pull" in the November Presidential election with four constitutional amendments, the proposed city road and water and sewer referendums and now the advisory referendum.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley said, "I may be for referendums (Oberndorf had also said she was for referendums) but not for rubber stamping." Then she suggested looking into a charter change.

Eight more streets

If the State Department of Highways and Transportation includes eight additional streets in the primary extension system, the city will receive an additional $150,000 annually in maintenance payments.

The extension of maintenance funds is possible under a policy adopted by the Commission on July 17. Since 1959 the Commission had not increased the primary extension mileage in any city in the State. Before a street could qualify it had to be designated a primary extension and this could only be done by giving up the designation on another street.

Now the Commission will add streets to each locality's primary extension system if they meet certain requirements including a traffic count of at least 15,000 vehicles a day.

City manager George L. Hanbury said there are eight highways in the Beach which meet the new standards. They include First Colonial Road from Great Neck Road to Virginia Beach Boulevard, Providence Road from Military Highway to Kempsville Road, Indian River Road from Military Highway to Kempsville Road, Holland Road from Route 44 to Princess Anne Road, Rosemont Road from Virginia Beach Boulevard to Holland Road, Newtown/Haygood Road from Virginia Beach Boulevard to Independence Boulevard, Lynnhaven Parkway from North Lynnhaven Road to Princess Anne Road and Oceana Boulevard from Virginia Beach Boulevard to Princess Anne Road and Oceana Boulevard from Virginia Beach Boulevard to Princess Anne Road.

Council Monday afternoon approved a resolution asking the Commission to include the streets.

R. L. "Buddy" Riggs promises Virginia Beach a "star-studded" I Love America Program on Dec. 5 and 6.

Riggs, who initiated the observance last year when he served on City Council, told Council Monday afternoon that big name people would be lured to the area and on Saturday, Dec. 6 will be the "largest parade Tidewater has ever seen." He hopes every high school band in the seven cities will participate along with colleges, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Veterans of Foreign Wars and other groups.

Wearing an I Love America knit shirt and ready with more I Love America Tee shirts, he said that, "We don't want to deny anyone the right to participate. It's their right to express love for their country."

There's no reason why every business and every home should not have a flag waving outside, he said. He promised "a lot of fun" and said Council members would all be invited to participate.

As a starter, Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr. proclaimed Dec. 5 I Love America Day and asked Virginia Beach citizens, all organizations and sister cities to join in the observance.

Last year on Dec. 5, Riggs chartered an airplane to pull a banner that proclaimed, "I Love America."

The tanks are here

For all those people in Virginia Beach who like to pretend that those water tanks are not there, take heart.

The city is going to quit painting the words "Virginia Beach" on the tanks as it's been doing much to the consternation of the aesthetes who like the security of having water nearby, but don't want the tanks so obvious.

The subject has come up before, notably in Kempsville when a tank went up there. Perhaps the city didn't want to hide something for which it waited so long and paid so much. Also, city manager George L. Hanbury said that the words worked a kind of unity, making all the citizens a part of Virginia Beach rather than Bayside or Kempsville.

But there's a new tank on Laskin Road. Hanbury said the city was receiving calls from people who didn't want the name up there. The tanks, painted an azure to fade into the sky, didn't need the words, according to the people. Hanbury at first thought the people didn't want the lettering facing the east, so he agreed to have it facing west, but now the people are objecting to that, he said.

Councilman Reid Ervin said that he didn't seem much point in the lettering. "Everybody in Virginia Beach knows where we are." As for the people out in boats, if they don't know they're off Virginia Beach, they're already in trouble.

"The best thing we can do is to suppress them visually." In the future, he suggested, don't put names on the tanks.

Hanbury agreed that a lot of people had objected to the name in Kempsville.

Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr. said that some people object to anything. Some even objected to the color.

Councilwoman Reba McClanan stated. "If the people object to it..."

Then there was a discussion about the people who don't object.

Ervin said that "Some people don't object to litter," and then asked why the lettering was put on.

Hanbury said it was on all the other tanks.

Councilman Patrick L. Standing said, "I don't think you should put it on if you don't have a reason."

Councilman Clarence A. Holland, disagreed, "There is a reason. It puts the name forward."

In an informal poll of Council (some hands were raised, some were half raised and others questionable).

McCoy determined that the lettering should be left off.

Oberndorf pointed out that Council wouldn't want other areas to think it was ignoring them.

Then Ervin suggested that the names be removed from the other tanks -- with the next painting.

Tons of paper

Virginia Beach City Councilman Clarence A. Holland must feel like the people in the current ad on TV showing them being inundated by paper.

Every week, he said, he receives "tons of paper, tons of reports, tons of everything else." He said all the material Council receives each week is unnecessary because "I don't go through all of it and it's a burden on people copying it." He suggested Council members receive a letter telling what materials are available and have the individual members go to the City Council office to read the parts they want.

Councilman John A. Baum agreed. As an ex-bureaucrat he understood how these things happened, he said.

I needed the quiet so He drew me aside.
Into the shadows where we could confide.
Away from the bustle where all day long
I hurried and worried when active and strong.

I needed the quiet tho at first I rebelled
But gently, so gently, my cross He upheld
And whispered so sweetly of spiritual things
The weakened in body, my spirit took wings
To heights never dreamed of when active and gay.
He loved me so greatly He drew me away.

I needed the quiet. No prison my bed,
But a beautiful valley of blessings instead
A place to grow richer in Jesus to hide.
I needed the quiet so He drew me aside.

Future high speed race car drivers? Maybe, but for now these Beach youngsters are content to burn rubber on the go-cart track.

Greg Goldfarb—Sun

Youngsters thrill on go-cart track

"Kids ride the go-carts like they would any other entertainment ride," said track owner R. E. Walker. "The carts can only run at about 15 to 20 miles per hour, but the kids drive then like they were speeding race cars."

Located at 926 Virginia Beach Boulevard, Walker has been renting go-cart rides for 21 years. He opens yearly from April 1 until Labor Day.

The carts, with 5 horsepower Honda motorcycle engines, traverse a quarter mile track.

Virginia Beach citizens won't know until next Monday — and maybe not then — how much money they'll be asked to approve in a road and water and sewer bond referendum in November.

Chances are they'll be asked to consider bond issues for less than the approximately $119 million in projects in lists prepared by the city administration.

Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr. Monday afternoon at an informal session, said that the Council's Committee on roads, which he heads is probably not going to recommend a referendum for $60 million. The committee, which also includes Meyera Oberndorf and Reid Ervin, has been considering asking for $15 or $16 million at a time and "not asking for so much at one time." The city's proposed list includes $56,709,738 in (See COUNCIL page 13)

Kimberly Moore, granddaughter of Beach residents Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Moore; and actress Pat Stankwich.

A star is born

It's not hard to see why little Kimberly Moore won a role in The Lost Colony outdoor drama at baby auditions held recently in Manteo. Kimberly, who donned a top hat and tails for the occasion, will appear on stage August 18 in the Lost colony's annual observance of the birthday of Virginia Dare, the first English child born in the New World almost 400 years ago. Virginia's mother Eleanor Dare is played by actress Pat Stankwich (shown above). 12 month old Kimberly is the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Moore of Virginia Beach.

Searching for his roots?

Fascinated by the intricate root configurations of some Virginia Beach trees, local resident Gary Zagami appears to be engulfed by the roots of a marsh tree at Seashore State Park. But don't worry, he safely untangled himself from the seemingly wooden entrapment.

Apartment complex management

Beach residents complete training

Maintaining a Virginia Beach apartment complex is, in a word, a complex job. At least the state of Virginia thinks so. It recently recognized apartment maintenance as a career certifiable for apprenticeship.

The Southeastern Tidewater Area Manpower Authority (STAMA) thinks so too. It put up the funding to train 15 students, and Tidewater Builders Association's Manpower Training program took on the training job.

The Tidewater Apartment Council, composed of apartment management firms, found the project so timely its members hired every trainee upon graduation.

Four Virginia Beach residents were among the recent graduates of the six-week pre-apprenticeship class. They are James A. Reynolds of 708 Morgaine Court, Billie A. Sims of 724 Spooner Road, James E. Barrington of 1024-B Tamer Avenue, and Lance A.

Dorsey of 109 Wales Drive, Apartment 201.

The training class, which will lead to a Virginia journeyman's certificate, drew students from the ranks of the economically disadvantaged, unemployed, and underemployed.

The trainees became familiar with dealing with people in an apartment environment and they learned the basics of apartment maintenance such as electrical repairs, plumbing repairs, carpentry, cleaning, painting, landscaping and related tasks. The class conducted field repairs on Norfolk's Jr. Achievement building and worked in actual apartments in the field.

Marcellus Heath, director of STAMA, and John Lasley, Private Sector Involvement Officer for CETA, were among the planners of the program. The Virginia Employment Commission assisted with recruiting.

The City of Virginia Beach has declared a state and local emergency, effective Wednesday, August 13 at 8 a.m. in accordance with section 37-11 of the Code of the City of Virginia Beach.

The following water uses, in brief, are restricted:

- No watering of personal grounds, except from watering cans not exceeding three gallons.

- Beach residents may not operate any ornamental fountains.
- Swimming, or wading pools may not be filled or refilled after effective date of water conservation order.
- No use of water from fire hydrants unless authorized by city.
- No serving of drinking water at restaurants or other public establishments unless requested by customer.

This state of emergency will remain in effect until further notice. Fine for violation of order may reach $500.

If convicted, of water violation, water may be turned off for duration of state of emergency.

For any additional details of the water conservation order, or clarification, call 427-4631.

road and drainage projects.

McCoy said that his committee would have its recommendation in by next Monday's meeting and said the citizen-council committee on water and sewer headed by C. G. Harris will make its recommendations at a later date, probably next Monday, Too.

The city has prepared a list of $54 million in water and sewer projects. Another $9.1 million bond issue is needed to repay bond anticipatory notes for other projects.

Council has to make a decision on the referendum by Sept. 3 to be in time to get it on the November ballot.

Among appointments made by Virginia Beach City Council Monday afternoon were those Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr., Councilman Harold Heischouer and Councilwoman Meyera Oberdorf to the Military Liaison Committee.

The Virginia Beach City Council Monday afternoon received $5,000 toward repayment of a $45,000 loan made to the Emergency Volunteer Rescue Squad.

The city extended the loan to the squad in 1973 when the new cardiac technician program was started, the first in Virginia and still larger than any in the world, Roy B. Williamson, president of the squad, said Monday.

Williamson presented the check to Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr. at an informal session of Council.

For Beach residents

Food stamp laws change

By TERRIE BASGIER,
Special to The Sun

Continuing inflation and rising costs are nipping at the buying power of all Beach residents. The low income are particularly hard hit. This is an even greater problem for the elderly and disabled.

New deductions

In January, 1980, changes were made in the food stamp program which affect the elderly and disabled. Members of food stamp households who are 60 years of age or older, or receive Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits or Social Security Administration (SSA) disability benefits are allowed a deduction for their medical and dental bills if they exceed $35 per month. Persons in these categories will not have a maximum amount allowed for the shelter deduction.

These new deductions could result in higher benefits for those households which are affected.

If you would like additional information about the food stamp program please contact the Virginia Beach Department of Social Services, 486-7223, extension 214.

The Reverend C. Reginald Walton officiated.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her gown was of Ivory sheerganza and re-embroidered chantilly lace with a high collar, fitted bodice and a sheer yoke embellished with brussels embroidery cameo. The full skirt with chapel length train featured panels of re-embroidered chantilly lace.

A camelot cap with finger tip illusion edged in matching lace framed the face. She carried a prayer book covered with tea roses and miniature carnations with ribbon and stephanotis streamers.

Mrs. Elizabeth C. Owens, sister of the bride was matron of honor.

Bridesmaids were Mrs. Denise C. West, sister of the bride, Mrs. Kim Poletti King, Mrs. Gigi Wollard Stewart all of Virginia Beach and Miss Jill Walton of Newport News, Virginia.

They wore sky blue silesta dresses and carried nosegays of miniature tipped carnations and baby's breath with lace streamers.

Stanley Eugene Wilson was best man. Ushers were Mark King, Rodney King, Jr., John Bonds and Michael Old.

Miss Cynthia Miller of Glen Rock, New Jersey was soloist.

A reception was held at the Oceana Officers Club. After a wedding trip to Myrtle Beach, South Carolina the couple will reside in Virginia Beach.

Mrs. King

The bride is a graduate of Kellam High School and is a senior at the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, Virginia. The bridegroom is a graduate of Kellam High School and is employed at Ford Motor Company.

Beach public schools

Bus schedules announced

Virginia Beach bus schedules for the 1980-1981 school year are being published this month by the Public Information Office of Virginia Beach Public Schools. The new tabloid newspaper-style 16-page publication will be distributed by mail and through individual school offices.

While the route information for each school is the most up-to-date available at the time of publication, there is a possibility some minor changes may be necessary in the next few weeks, in the interest of efficiency and economy. Parents and students having any questions about the bus schedules they will receive are asked to call the student's school.

The school system is mailing about 32,500 copies of the bus schedules to the parents of the youngest school-age child in a family; however, because of the large number of new registrations during the late summer, all names have not been entered into the computer. A few families may receive duplicate copies if more than one child in a household will be in public school, and there is a possibility a few other families will not receive a mailed copy.

Extra copies of the bus schedules will be available at the individual schools for those parents not receiving them by mail, and after August 18, a copy will be given to each new registrant.

Beach 4-Her's win awards

Four-H'ers representing the Virginia Beach team include Kim Yount, Jim Lemmon, Valerie Grabowski, and Renee Siler.

Kim Yount and Valerie Grabowski placed highest in individual contest and will be representing the State of Virginia at the National Horse Judging Finals, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania and the U.S. Arabian National Championship in Louisville, Kentucky, both scheduled in October, 1980.

LETTER TO EDITOR

Keep Beach beautiful!

Dear Editor:

Concerning the "Beach Parking Analysis" prepared by the Virginia Beach Research and Advisory Council, I have studied the report carefully and agree with most of its recommendations. Two of them however, I find very inappropriate from the point-of-view of community aesthetics.

First: "Create parking areas along the section of the Shore Drive extending through Seashore State Park" and second: "We urge the City to immediately implement the proposal to create a parking area along Atlantic Parkway at the North End."

The most beautiful drive in Virginia Beach is probably the section of Shore Drive that is adjacent to Seashore State Park. The tall trees and other natural vegetation and the absence of billboards make it a treat to drive through. This pleasant road toward the resort area was at least partially continued on Atlantic Avenue due to the screen planting that existed on the west side of Atlantic Avenue - recently (or soon to be) destroyed by utility construction.

I would hope that the State would veto the use of the shoulders of Shore Drive for parking, shuttle bus stops and shelters on, or adjacent to, the Seashore State Park.

I would also hope that the City would reestablish the dense bank of vegetation that existed on the west side of Atlantic Avenue where a busy highway penetrates a densely settled residential neighborhood. The proposed intrusion of perpendicular parking into this space would add a few tourist parking places in a non-tourist area and would be inappropriate. Parking that would be used for a few hours on Saturdays and Sundays for three months each year is not the best use of the land. There are other reasons why the recommendation of the Research and Advisory Council is inappropriate.

I will mention only one. The screen planting on the west side of Atlantic Avenue was initiated and almost entirely funded through citizen contributions, with leadership being provided by the Council of Garden Clubs. I believe that the City should reestablish equal or better screen planting as the utility construction is completed in each block of Atlantic Avenue.

Our City will attract more tourists and increase community pride if we maintain and improve its beauty.

Sun ages people's skin

Beach residents with wrinkles?

By JACK WILLIAMS

Special to the Sun

Face the facts: Wrinkles and aging of the skin are as inevitable as Virginia Beach sunshine on a summer day.

And no amount of skin gels, moisturizers, facials or tanning lotions will forestall the effects.

Ah, but there is a product that will enable you to have your tan - albeit, not a radiant one - and healthy skin, too.

Sunscreens.

A little dab will do ya.

Dr. Stephen Mandy, a clinical professor of dermatology and bearer of the above information, is convinced sunscreens are the only way to go.

Preferably the water-resistant type that remain in effect all day, no matter how profusely you sweat or how many times you immerse yourself in water.

Mandy is also convinced that:

-Dry skin does not, of itself, cause wrinkles.

-Saunas and steam rooms have no healthy effect on the skin.

-The value of facials is "debatable."

-Men tend to have healthier skin than women because they do less to their skin.

-There is nothing on the market that will prevent wrinkles despite certain ambiguous advertising claims.

Said Mandy:

"If there were a Fountain of Youth, I'd be the first one to jump in.

"We're researching aging, and because it is more accessible we can study the skin better than the affects of aging on the heart."

An active runner and skin diver in Miami, Fla., Mandy insists he would look considerably older than his 34 years were it not for the extensive use of sunscreens. He also would be more prone to skin cancer, he said.

"The sun and overbathing accelerate aging of the skin," he said. "But it is a fallacy to think that dry skin is prone to wrinkle. The skin-care industry has done a good job of convincing the public of this so that it can sell moisturizers.

"Drying the skin is a function of the relative humidity, not the sun."

As for the moisturizers, said Mandy, they have no value.

Suntan lotions?

"By and large, they are weak.

"Their SPF (Sun Protection Factor, which the Food and Drug Administration has recommended be put on all sun-screening products) is two on a scale of 10. Sunscreens can range from two to eight. Oils promote sunburn rather than diminish it."

(A Sun Protection Factor of six, for example, means that a person can be exposed to the sun for six times 15 minutes without getting red. Sunscreens are available for various skin types, with varying degrees of protection.)

Sun protection is vital from late May through October, said Mandy. The most crucial hours: 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

"Generally, unless you have the most sensitive of skin, you don't need a sunscreen except during those hours," said Mandy.

"You can do more damage in one day from 11 to 1 than you can every day of the week from 4 to 5 p.m."

If you're sailing, said Mandy, you're getting an additional 60 percent to 70 percent exposure reflected off the water.

"One hour in the water or on the white sands of the beach is equal to several hours in your back yard," he said.

Sunscreens - generally priced from $2.50 to $4.50 for a 4-ounce container that should last an individual through the summer - have been on the market for nearly a decade.

Major advances have taken place in the last two years to add water resistance and provide for skin types, said Mandy.

Mandy, a practicing dermatologist who has written extensively in medical journals, also recommends "mild and gently" soaps for the skin.

Connection fees reduced?

property owners at the north end of the Beach where older homes have been converted to two units or have garage units.

At present the units are treated as separate single-family units and the charge is $780 per unit ($1560 for two) compared to duplex charges of $560 per unit ($1120 for two).

The proposal would bring the cost of connections to the single family lot the same per unit as the cost for duplexes.

City Manager George L. Hanbury said that the proposal would make the system more equitable and would affect about 100 properties in North Virginia Beach. "Everything is unique in that area," he said.

At present the fees are set according to the zoning of the property.

Beach residents advised

Choosing contractors?

Are you a Virginia Beach resident thinking about converting your garage into a room, installing energy-efficient insulation, fixing a roof or hiring a home improvement contractor to do any similar type home improvement?

If so, you should know how to shop for a home improvement contractor.

The following are guidelines to assist you in selecting a contractor for your particular job:

Contracting guidelines

- Virginia State law requires that contractors who do work over $300,000 per year or $40,000 per job are to be registered and are classified as Class A Contractors.

- Beginning July 1 contractors who do work up to $39,000 per year or $1500 per job, or who are required to obtain a building permit are also required to register and are classified as Class B Contractors.

(Note: There are services, i.e. installation of storm windows, which do not require a building permit and therefore are not covered under local building codes.)

- Avoid contractors who pressure you into a contract by a "one time only" offer or those who demand full payment of the job in advance.

- Check with the Tidewater Better Business Bureau to see if that contractor has complaints on file, and if they have been resolved.

- Ask the contractor if they are members of a trade association (i.e. Tidewater Builders Association, Tidewater Home Improvement Business Association, etc.)

- Ask for a written estimate, a time of completion, and a payment schedule that is proportionate to the job progress.

- Get at least three (3) estimates, and remember that price does not insure quality, so ask for references. If the contractor is truly professional then there should be no hesitation.

- Ask for a written guarantee of their work (normally a one (1) year warranty.)

- Ask the contractor if they have liability or compensation insurance to protect you from any accident while the job is progressing.

- Prior to beginning the job, ask if a building permit is needed. If you wish to check whether or not a permit is needed, call the City of Virginia Beach, Department of Permits and Inspections, at 427-42111. Insist that the builder obtain the necessary permits. This obligates the builder/contractor to conform to the building codes.

If you have second thoughts about the contract, you have three (3) days in which to cancel the contract in writing.

Avoid problems

If a consumer has followed these guidelines, problems should be avoided. However, if an individual has paid a contractor for work that was not completed and no settlement can be reached, they may file for a judgement in their favor in General District Court for a fee of $9.50. A lawyer is not necessary for this Court, also known as Small Claims Court.

Once a judgement is obtained, the consumer can then file with the State Board of Contractors Recovery Fund. The money can be taken from the fund created by the contractors' license. The contractor who has a judgement against him, must repay the fund before his license can be renewed.

For information concerning a consumer problem, contact the Virginia Beach consumer protection division at 427-4421.

keeping with the area and that within a five mile radius, three other mini-warehouses are located.

Councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf said that although she had initial misgivings, she felt that the mini-warehouses would be less objectionable and create less additional traffic than the businesses which could be located there under the zoning.

The application was approved unanimously.

Council also granted a new conditional use permit to the S & C Company for housing for the elderly on a 3.390 acre parcel on the east side of Malibu Drive, south of Alcott Road in the Lynnhaven Borough. The current permit is scheduled to expire.

Anthony P. Diteaux, representing the applicant, said that the non-profit sponsor will receive a direct loan from the federal government to build 123 units for the elderly under the Section 202 Program. The building will be three stories high.

The Planning Commission recommended approval on both petitions.

Council also concurred with the Planning Commission which recommended denial of the petition of Campus East Associates for a change of zoning from R-5 Residential District to A-1 Apartment District on a 2.289 acre parcel at the northeast intersection of Baker Road and Wesleyan Drive.

The existing zoning allows six single-family homes while the proposed zoning would allow 27 apartment units.

Members of the Lakes Estates Civic League and the Lawson Forest Civic League opposed the petition.

John Bagley, president of the Lakes Civic League, said that the rezoning would open 650 acres to possible apartment zoning.

Burrow pits clarified

The Comprehensive Zoning Ordinance has been amended to clarify sections on burrow pits.

Virginia Beach City Council Monday afternoon approved the amendments.

One section identifies what types of action constitute a burrow pit and enumerates activities which are exempt from regulation.

Another establishes the type of information that must be submitted in conjunction with an application for a conditional use permit for a burrow pit as well as general requirements that must be met.

The remaining amendments replace the term "burrow pit" in all portions of the CZO that presently refer to "extractive industries."

Council takes a hike

Members of Council (I don't know exactly who) are supposed to meet at Little Island Beach at 9 a.m. Saturday to start a walk to False Cape. Councilman Standing is furnishing a boat he said, for the less hardy from some other point.

Connection fee reduction

Reducing sewage connection and installation fees where two units are located on one single-family lot will be considered next Monday by Virginia Beach City Council to bring the charges in line with those set for conventional duplex units.

The proposed ordinance with the changes will affect

Cantaloupe harvest

Q: My cantaloupes look fine, but when will I know when the fruits are ready to harvest? [Becky Hurley - Chesapeake Beach]

A: Cantaloupes are ready to harvest when they are at the "slip" stage. This occurs when a slight pressure applied at the point where the stem meets the melon causes the melon to easily slip off the vine. The fruit is usually at the "slip" stage when a crack appears completely encircling the point where the vine joins the fruit.

Concerning the harvesting of other types of melons: maturity of casabas and honeydews is judged by the melon's skin which will turn a subtle shade of yellow as well as by a softening of the blossom end of the fruit. Crenshaw and Persian melons are ready for picking when they develop a fruity scent; watermelons are ready when a rap of the fruit creates a dull rather than a sharp sound, and when the ground spot turns from white to a light yellow or cream color.

Cucumber leaf spots

Q: My cucumber leaves have developed white powdery spots on them and the leaves are turning yellow. What is involved and what can I do to stop it? [Dianne Parlette - Larkspur]

A: Powdery mildew, a fungal disease, is the culprit. Plants that can be affected include squash, cucumbers, cantaloupes, watermelon, and pumpkin.

Initial symptoms of the disease are the white or brown spots or growths on leaves and young stems. Plants may yellow, wither and die while the fruit sunscalds or ripens prematurely.

Cultural control measures include planting resistant varieties, using proper spacing between plants, and practicing crop rotation. Chemical control measures call for spraying the affected plant with benomyl at 7 to 10 day intervals. Benomyl is not registered for use on pumpkins.

Store canned products

Floating peaches

Q: What causes peaches to sometime float in jars? [Linda Gibson-Great Bridge]

A: Fruit has a tendency to float to the top of the jar where it changes color when exposed to the trapped air. This usually occurs because the fruit is packed too loosely, syrup is too heavy, or because some air remains in tissues of the fruit after heating and processing.

Store canned products

Q: Where should I store home-canned products and how long will they last? [Lucille Wattson-Fort Story]

A: Canned goods should be stored in a cool, dry, dark place. Storage temperatures between 50° and 70°F are acceptable. Higher temperatures reduce the shelf-life on storage period and can cause spoilage. It is recommended for top quality canned goods, that you preserve for one year. Food will be safe to use for longer than a one year storage period, but it gradually loses quality.

Husband leaves family in Virginia Beach; woman wants reassurance

Dear LaVerne,

Last year, my husband deserted me, leaving me to raise our 3 children in Virginia Beach alone. I am a Christian and I want my children to be raised in a Christian home, but sometimes it seems impossible to carry on. The devil constantly tells me that I'll never make it, that at some point I will have to give up.

Even though I am a Christian, most of my days are without joy. What can the future possibly hold for me? (signed: S. G.)

Dear S.G.,

Thank you for your letter. It seems like Satan has launched an attack on the family unit. Well over half of all marriages in America end in divorce. I appreciate the fact that you have made a stand for Christ and you want your children raised in a Christian home.

Now, the devil may tell you that you'll never make it, but you are a child of God, and "Greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world." OF COURSE YOU'RE GOING TO MAKE IT. Don't even consider giving up your faith in Christ. Satan is trying to make you believe that things would be better for you if you denied your walk with the Lord. But that is just another one of his many cheap, deceiving tricks. And if you fall for it, the devil will ultimately ruin your entire life.

You mentioned that you have no joy in your life. I can understand how you've allowed your circumstances to rob you of your joy. I am going to give you a scripture verse and I want you to write it down and claim it every day of your life. Jesus spoke these words in St. John 16:25. "Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name, ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full."

For week of August 13-20

ARIES: (March 21 to April 19 — Also Aries Ascendant) — Deal with resistance or conflict with mate or lover calmly. Not the time for confrontations. Blockages at work can erode your self-confidence if you allow it. Keep your nose to the grindstone and maintain a low profile.

TAURUS: (April 20 to May 20 — Also Taurus Ascendant) — Work on creative projects but don't present them until the end of the week. Romance is favored for the unattached and others find pleasure in lively communication with mate or lover. Not the time for speculating with money.

GEMINI: (May 21 to June 20 — Also Gemini Ascendant) — You can feel a pull between career and domestic interests. Not the time to overspend or invest in a speculative scheme presented by a friend. Put forth your bright ideas at work during the latter part of the week.

CANCER: (June 21 to July 22 — Also Cancer Ascendant) — Not the time to risk your money on somebody else's ventures. Check out all the facts carefully — something unreliable could be involved. Guard against impulsive words you could regret if you and a loved one have disagreements.

LEO: (July 23 to Aug. 22 — Also Leo Ascendant) — Deal with tense family members calmly. Don't be afraid to say you're sorry if you are at fault. Not the time to push your ideas on others. Cooperation is key, so listen and reach diplomatic agreements.

VIRGO: (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22 — Also Virgo Ascendant) — Accept challenges on the job and prove your worth. Those in high position are watching you and will be impressed. Use your creative intellect and don't let minor setbacks unnerve you. Above all, don't let down on efficiency.

LIBRA: (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22 — Also Libra Ascendant) — Follow your intuition and proceed with a creative project. You could be up for a raise in pay and the increased cash should be used to pay bills, not speculate with. Don't let obstacles depress you — get enough rest.

SCORPIO: (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21 — Also Scorpio Ascendant) — Resist tendency to dictate to others — be diplomatic. Believe in your talents and develop them. Concentrate on work and don't be led astray by friends bent on pleasure. Deal with authority figures calmly and don't lose your temper.

Planning to attend West Virginia University, in Morgantown, Cindy Smith says she would like to study there because of the curriculum and the mountains. "I like the mountains of West Virginia," she said. "When I was a small kid we used to visit there and I remember I always loved it. But since then, I've decided to go look at it because I intend to study public relations and they have a good program for that there." Smith, a 1980 Kellam High School graduate is the 18 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander L. Smith of the Windsor Woods section of Virginia Beach. An eight year Beach resident, Smith enjoys snow skiing, playing guitar, and tennis. At Kellam, she was the 1980 president of the Student council Association. She plans to attend a local college for a year and then go to West Virginia, after which she plans to work for a private company. Her favorite Beach restaurant is Blue Pete's; and nightclub is Country Comfort. In regard to the Beach, she said, "I like it here because it is both urban and rural, with many places to go in my spare time."

Biggest contest yet; may be moved next year

12,000 attend 1980 ECSC

By GREG GOLDFARB, editor,
The Virginia Beach Sun

"During the East Coast Championship (ECSC), I stay on a natural high," said this year's ECSC chairman and Virginia Beach Jaycee, Bill Sutton.

"I stay so busy, and get so excited, I've only gotten about six hours sleep over the last two days; but that's alright. I didn't want to miss a minute of the fun!"

Sponsored by the Virginia Beach Jaycees, last weekend the ECSC concluded its eighteenth year. Staged at the local military reservation, Camp Pendleton, this year's contest, according to Jaycee officials, was the biggest and best contest to date.

"In terms of competitors," Sutton reported "the ECSC is the largest surfing contest on the East Coast. This year we figure about 270 surfers entered; this is about 25 more than entered last year."

"In addition, I estimate that between 10 and 12,000 spectators came out to witness the contest, and other related activities, which is about 2 to 4,000 more than the previous year."

CHAIRMAN

The purpose of the ECSC, according to Sutton, is to give local youths a chance to participate competitively in a sport native to Virginia Beach.

"The Virginia Beach Jaycees sponsor a good many projects," the 10 year Beach resident said, "But all the Jaycees are particularly fond of the ECSC because it is so youth oriented."

"I, as well as all the Jaycees want to give the youngsters, and some adults in Virginia Beach, the op-more days if they had planned to leave."

Sutton: A good organizer

Producing and directing an activity which serves thousands of people is not an easy task. It requires intelligence, discipline, usually some sort of special personal interest, and commitment to a specific goal.

Sutton, 30, has been a member of the Jaycees for only six months. He is an Old Dominion University biology graduate, and a local chemical salesman. And it was he who was chosen this year to execute one of the Jaycees most prestigious events.

"I gladly assumed the duties of this year's ECSC contest," Sutton admits, "because I had been getting too wrapped up in my work. I was not devoting enough time to community projects, which is something I feel very strongly about."

"I grew up in Winchester, Va., which compared to Virginia Beach is relatively small. But it had a lot of good community activities, with a lot of local involvement. When I was attending ODU, I missed those activities and the involvement."

"I worked hard at ODU and received my degree; subsequently, I have worked hard in my profession. But now that I've learned the ropes of my business, and feel secure in my job, I felt it was time to devote more attention to my personal values."

"I wanted to produce the ECSC for two reasons: It was one of the most popular of the Jaycee activities, and portunity to compete in an annual competitive event native to the area; i.e. surfing. I think the ECSC is good because it gives young surfers a goal to shoot for, and a chance to be recognized for a personal achievement."

"The Virginia Beach community also benefits because it is a very visible event for the city; a highly organized event; and local businesses like it because it gives many tourists a reason to stay in town a couple

270 surfers competed last weekend at Pendleton

it was also the hardest. There are many things to incorporate, and many months of planning necessary, to make things happen successfully in just two short days. The ECSC is a real challenge."

The invitational ECSC?

Sutton says ultimately, he envisages the ECSC as a national invitational surfing contest, offering top money prizes to top surfers. The only trouble is, Virginia Beach waves may not be grand enough to accommodate top flight competitors.

"There are already people representing national sponsors who have expressed an interest in perpetuating the ECSC," Sutton said, "and someday we may be able to make the contest a pro-am invitational."

"But right now, before a hot surfer from California will drop $1,500 for expenses to surf in our championship we need to be able to offer at least a $3,000 purse. If the ECSC ever reaches that magnitude, we would probably be able to acquire national sports coverage."

"Eventually, the national sponsors may come, but I doubt if the national television cameras will because the waves at Virginia Beach usually aren't spectacular enough for them."

A contest too successful?

Whether or not the ECSC will become a pro-am invitational is yet to be seen, but it doesn't really matter. There are many local people, and local sponsors who will continue to support the Virginia Beach based contest for years to come. The most pressing problem ECSC officials have to deal with now is its size. Some say it cannot grow much bigger.

The ECSC may have reached its limit at its present location. It may be moved to the wooden pier.

"We have just about reached the limit for the ECSC in regard to the number of participants in relation to surfing space available," Sutton said. "I don't know how much more Camp Pendleton can take."

"But, we appreciate all local military officials, the National Guard, and the Virginia Beach City Council have done in supporting this project. The Jaycees also appreciate the support of the many, many sponsors who contribute time, merchandise, and funds to our cause."

Echoing Suttons' feelings about the ECSC, and its size is Raymond Norris. Norris is a 15 year Beach resident, and the Virginia Beach director of the Eastern Surfing Association, which the Jaycees looks to for judges and technical information concerning the governing of the surfing contests.

"This is the biggest ECSC contest I've ever participated in," Norris said. (His son Ray, 7, won the Mr. ECSC title).

"The only thing the Jaycees have to deal with in the future, is setting a limit on the number of participants. In fact, because of the size, I don't know if it will ever become an invitational contest. There wouldn't be enough room for all the good local surfers, plus the good national ones too."

Former Jaycee president Mike LaGiglia said this year's ECSC is one of the best he's seen.

"This is a really super fantastic weekend," he said. "The waves are good; the weather is great; and the girls are beautiful. I repeat, the girls are beautiful."

"I really appreciate the excellent community participation, and cannot thank the State military officials enough for their support."

This year's Jaycee president Ed Taylor also said this year's contest came off really well, and suggests it may be moved farther North in the future.

Jaycee external vice president Kenny Kinard said he was in heaven while riding the ECSC queen and her court in a four wheel drive vehicle provided by a local radio station.

Busy in the reviewing stand are Jaycees Ron Swan and Scott Burdett.

"This year's ECSC is really a record breaker," Taylor said.

"It gets better every time we do it. I think because we have enthusiastic Jaycee members putting it on who do it very well; because we get very good news coverage of it, and good local community support."

"But we're just about to outgrow this area. We may consider moving the ECSC to the wooden pier down at 15th Street."

"Virginia Governor, the Honorable John Dalton came to support the ECSC last weekend, and had these comments:

"I think the ECSC is a real good thing for the city of Virginia Beach," Governor Dalton said.

"It gives the city recognition up and down the East Coast. Those of us at the State level are proud to work with the Jaycees in helping to put on an activity such as this; and share with the people of Virginia Beach in the fun and excitement of surfing contest which means so much to so many young people in the community."

Virginia Beach city councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf was also in attendance at this year's ECSC. She had these comments:

"I'm extremely enthusiastic about local activities such as this. I think the ECSC is definitely a positive asset to the city; and I think the Virginia Beach Jaycees should be commended in this undertaking."

Also praising the Jaycees were part of the ECSC queen's court, Karen Mullaney and Brae Lockwood.

More Pics, pp. 5, 7, 11

"The Jaycees have been real nice to us," Mullaney said. "They've given us, and our dates, dinners, picnics, and have really shown us a good time."

Lockwood said, "It's been really fun for the girls who were involved in the ECSC. At first I, as well as some of the other girls, weren't sure how important this activity was. But it's definitely a big thing. And if we had any doubts of it, the Jaycees sure treated us like we were the most important girls in Virginia Beach. We wish we could do it again next year."

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Must pay to keep the Beach clean?

By GREG GOLDFARB, editor,
The Virginia Beach Sun

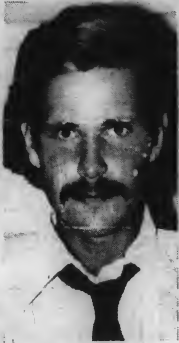

Virginia Beach residents seem to be having their cans kicked around.

Local resident Peter Fiedler decries: "I went to the Virginia Beach Dome parking lot to take a bag of aluminum cans to the Reynolds Aluminum recycling truck. They will pay me 23¢ a pound for them every Thursday morning. But when I tried to drive my car onto the parking lot to deliver them to the truck, the city tried to charge me 25¢ just to take my cans to the recycling truck."

"Why must I pay the city 25¢, or the equivalency of almost a pound of cans, to do my part for ecology and help keep Virginia Beach clean?"

"Now don't get me wrong. I'm retired Navy, and can afford the quarter. I don't mind parking on the road and walking an extra 100 feet over to the truck to turn in my cans. But some people are old and can't afford the quarter, and don't need to walk the extra distance just to help keep the Beach ecologically clean."

Good point, Mr. Giedler! This is a classic example of trying to buck City Hall.

Goldfarb

From the manager's office

According to Jim Ricketts, Pavilion manager and Dome supervisor, the parking fee originated in the city manager George Hanbury's office.

"The parking fee policy was set out of the city manager's office," Ricketts said. "But I talked with the city manager's office and we are aware of the problem. Our alternative to the present situation, keeping in mind that it will end on Labor Day, is to move the position of the recycling truck from the Dome parking lot to the parking lot of the new Pavilion. That will make the recycling truck more visible and probably more accessible because it would be right off the interstate."

But, Mike Barrett, assistant to the city manager has some different thoughts.

"The location of the recycling truck is up to the recycling company," Barrett said, "and we're willing to work with them any, and every way we can. We will allow the truck to be located almost anywhere it's possible."

Jerry Lewis finds his cans hard to carry.

"But, as long as the truck is located in the Dome parking lot, it will be subject to the policy which governs the lot. That is, that all cars parking there will have to pay the 25¢, even though the man who collects money at the gate could realize that a car loaded with empty aluminum cans probably has come there for recycling and not to spend the day. As it is now, however, we have no plans to change the location of the truck, or to revise the parking policy."

Reynolds doesn't complain

Reynolds Aluminum really could not care where the recycling truck is located, as long as they continue to get their cans. In addition, they say their truck driver has instructions to reimburse all recycling can vendors of their 25¢ if they park on the lot; although Fiedler said no one told him he could get his money back.

"We reimburse every customer who has to pay a quarter to bring their cans to the recycling truck," said Richard Mace, Beach manager for Reynolds Aluminum. "But I don't think it's fair for the customer to have to pay to have their cans recycled. We at Reynolds don't complain, however, because at some areas, we have to pay rental fee just to put our truck on a lot."

"We've been coming to the Dome parking lot now for three years. We like it here and don't plan to move unless we are moved by other forces. We like it at the Dome because it is visible. We think we have a successful program here. Last month we served 222 customers; paid out hundreds, possibly thousands of dollars for cans, and all we had to pay in reimbursements was approximately $55.50. Not everyone is asking for their quarters back."

"If the location of the recycling truck was to change, however, we would require a month of lead time to advertise it properly. But it would be no problem. If the Pavilion parking lot was suggested, we wouldn't mind because it would still be accessible and visible from the interstate."

"But again, right now, we tell our drivers to tell our customers that they can regain their quarter by asking."

Fiedler didn't know

Fiedler, says he wasn't told he could get his quarter back.

"No. No one told me I could be reimbursed," he said, "but I've only been there a few times. I go to the nearby oceanfront branch library a lot, and find it convenient to go to the Dome recycling location. I will go back if they reimburse me for my quarter. But I'll also go to the Pavilion if the truck is moved."

What's if all mean?

Obviously, Virginia Beach residents will travel to wherever the recycling truck is located. They want to keep the Beach clean, do their part for ecology, and make a few bucks.

But over the Summer months, they are getting yanked around by city policy which costs them money for being civic minded.

The city, and Reynolds Aluminium should get together and decide a location for year round recycling that will not cost the Beach residents anything for doing something they feel is in the Virginia Beach's best interest.

Preparation tips outlined

Prepare for Beach hurricanes

By PETER BLY

Special to the Sun

As the height of the hurricane season approaches, residents of Virginia Beach should, as a safety measure, prepare for a repeat of last September's two major storms, Hurricanes David and Frederic, says the Insurance Information Institute.

Hurricanes, called the "greatest storm on earth" by the National Weather Service, have killed more than 14,000 Americans since 1900 and have caused about $8 billion in property damage in the last decade.

Frederic, which hit the Gulf and Mid-Atlantic states last Sept. 12—six days after David hit the area—was the most costly single catastrophe on record.

Especially vulnerable to hurricanes, says the Institute, are densely populated coastal regions where large numbers of people live in mobile homes. Because the 1970s were relatively free of killer hurricanes, many coastal residents have never experienced a major hurricane, a storm 100 miles wide and 10 miles high with powerful winds and rain which can sink ships, change coastlines and strip large land areas of buildings, crops, power lines and bridges.

Major improvement

Major improvements in hurricane warning systems almost guarantee that a 24-hour warning will be given before a storm strikes any area. However, residents, especially in low-lying areas, must be prepared to respond to a warning. Almost 400 persons were killed in Cameron Parish, La., during Hurricane Audrey in 1957 when most residents ignored an evacuation warning.

Also, long before the first sign of a storm, property owners should check their insurance coverage to make sure they are fully protected against any damage which may result from a hurricane, the Institute says.

Most property insurance policies cover damage caused by a hurricane's wind. However, except under limited circumstances, these same policies do not provide any protection for homes or household possessions damaged by tidal waves or other kinds of flood water whether wind-driven or not. An exception is any loss caused by rain entering a building through an opening made by wind. Also, comprehensive automobile fire and theft insurance covers automobiles for flood damage, the Institute notes.

Flood damage as a result of hurricanes is covered under special flood insurance policies that are issued under the National Flood Insurance Program, which is operated by the federal government. Most insurance agents have information on this program.

Because a hurricane results in thousands of claims, the insurance industry has developed special procedures which enable personnel to move quickly and effectively into an area. Working through emergency claim centers, they begin providing settlements and payments for losses as soon as the storm is over.

Hurricane preparedness

While there is nothing anyone can do to move a house out of the path of a hurricane, there are steps that can be taken to protect life and limb and reduce damage.

The following information should prove helpful in the event that a hurricane strikes.

A pre-storm checklist

In the event that a hurricane whips into an area with its destructive winds and heavy rains, there are certain things residents can do in the hours before the storm arrives.

•Leave low-lying areas that may be swept by high tides and waves. If your escape route is over a road likely to be covered by water or likely to be congested, don't delay evacuation any longer than necessary.

•If you live in a mobile home, check you tie-downs and leave for more substantial shelter. If your mobile home can be moved, it should be taken to a safe area. Damage can be minimized by securing the mobile home with heavy cable anchored in concrete footing.

•Moor your boat securely or move it to a designated safe area.

•Board up your windows or protect them with storm shutters or tape. Some suggest that a window on the side of the building opposite the side from which the wind is blowing should be left slightly open.

Hurricanes have killed more than 18,000 Americans since 1900; $8 billion in damage.

•Secure all outdoor objects that might be blown around. This includes garbage cans, garden tools, toys, signs, porch furniture and other seemingly harmless items that can become missiles of destruction in a hurricane. Also make sure that garage doors, awnings and storm shutters are secured. Roof antennas should be removed or lowered.

•Have at least one flashlight in good condition, with extra batteries readily available.

•Check your transistor radio. This may be your only link with the outside world for some time. It will keep you advised of the storm's progress. Also it will help dispel any rumors that might develop.

This magic moment

Silhouettes are part of the magic of Virginia Beach. This silhouette includes four people, two of whom appear to be gazing at the silhouette of a sailboat on tranquil waters.

•Stock a generous supply of drinking water in clean bathtubs, jugs, bottles and cooking utensils in case there is contamination of your area's water supply. Have extra canned goods and non-perishable foods on hand.

•Cars should be fueled since service stations may be inoperable for several days. If possible, your vehicle should be moved out of the path where flooding may occur.

•If you rely on medicines of any kind, make sure that an extra supply is on hand. In case of catastrophe, all available drugs and materials will be used for care of the injured.

•Remain at home, if possible. Take no unnecessary risks. Stay away from exposed windows and glass doors. If your home has an 'inside' room stay there during the height of the storm.

•Remain indoors. Travel is especially dangerous when winds and tides are whipping through your area.

After the Storm has passed

If your home, apartment or place of business has been damaged, here's what to do:

•Make temporary repairs to prevent further loss from rain, wind or looting. Expenses of such repairs are covered by most insurance policies, so save all receipts and statements.

•Contact your company or agent as soon as possible. If you must leave your home, leave an address or telephone number where you can be reached.

•Be patient. Insurance representatives will first settle hardship cases. Also remember that policy forms differ, so don't assume that your settlement will be the same as that of your neighbor.

Great care should be taken if you're going outside or cleaning up after a storm. For your own safety and that of your family, here are some things to remember:

•Beware of loose or dangling power lines.

•Walk or drive carefully, especially along debris-filled streets. Snakes, poisonous insects and washouts of roads and bridges are among the dangers you may encounter.

•Check for spoilage of any food you might have had refrigerated, particularly if the power was shut off for more than a few hours.

•Make sure the drinking water is safe before using it.

Finally, remember that your entire community has been affected by the storm, so it will take some time to return to normal operations. Be patient and cooperate with police and emergency personnel.

Processing pickles?

Q: Why should pickles be processed in a boiling water

Q: Why should pickles be processed in a boiling water bath canner? Mrs. Joan Corboy of Bayside

A: The U.S.D.A. recommends heat processing in a boiling-water bath for all pickle products to destroy contaminating microorganisms that cause spoilage and to inactivate enzymes responsible for changes in texture, flavor and odor during storage.

Honey in jelly?

Q: Can I use honey instead of sugar when making jellies and jams? Mrs. Timothy Douglas - Chesapeake

A: Honey can be used in place of part, but not all, of the sugar in jellied products but it will give the product a distinctive flavor. Honey can replace up to one-half of the sugar in recipes without added pectin. In recipes with added pectin, two cups of honey can be substituted for two cups of sugar if the yield is more than five to six glasses. In smaller recipes, replace only ¼ to 1 cup of the sugar with honey.

Rabbits in the garden

Q: How can I keep rabbits out of my garden? They are eating up my vegetables and have been doing so for a number of weeks now. Dorothy Ingram - Oceanfront

A: Healthy vegetable gardens can prove to be food bonanzas for local wildlife such as rabbits. Several things you may want to try in discouraging rabbits from coming into your garden are:

•Spreading moth crystals around the borders of the vegetable plot. The odor of the crystals tends to dissuade the animals' entry.

•Mixing up a hot chili pepper solution and spraying it on the vegetable plants. Use two tablespoons of pepper to each gallon of water - be sure to wash the vegetables before eating them.

•If the two measures above fail, fence in the garden area with 4 x 2" mesh welded galvanized wire. Bury the fence 6 - 12" to keep out burrowing animals.

Virginia Beach residents send in questions to local extension agents.

Brown spots on peaches

Q: Small brown spots developed on my peaches when nearing harvesting time. These spots quickly spread to cover the entire fruit and completely destroyed my entire crop of peaches this year. What kind of disease is this and how can I avoid it next year? Mrs. Charles Serafini - Witchduck Point

A: Brown rot is a fungal disease and is very destructive concerning cherry, nectarine, peach and plum. The disease can infect the flowers, twigs and fruits and can destroy the fruit very rapidly.

The disease overwinters on old decayed fruit on the ground or on the tree, and in twig cankers. It is therefore important to clean-up and destroy the debris under your fruit trees before the advent of spring.

The brown rot becomes active when pink shows in the buds and you should start a preventative spraying program at that time. Benomyl is used to control peach brown rot.

The rules of the game

By SCOTT BURDETT, Competition chairman
East Coast Surfing Championship

First of all, the Judges were all qualified by the Eastern Surfing Association. They judged each contestant's rides by wave selection and judgement, ability to perform different maneuvers and ability to maintain control while riding in the critical part of the wave (critical part being closest to the white water). Points were given for each maneuver performed. The surfer having the highest point total: The winner!

Most winning surfers use the age old strategy: Catch the most waves possible and ride each one to the best of their ability. Winning surfers may not be the most spectacular riders in the water, however, they are the most consistent. Planning, setting up and executing each maneuver with precision and style, sets them in a class by themselves, that being: the winner's circle!

30,000 students fed daily

Beach schools open September 2

When Virginia Beach Public Schools open September 2, school cafeterias, 58 of them, will begin the monumental task of feeding some 30,000 hungry students each day.

The Virginia Beach Public School lunch program ensures that each meal each school day fills the nutritional needs of students from first grade through senior high school.

Each lunch--hot or cold--offered to elementary students will have the five basic food components: meat (or alternate), milk, bread (or alternate), fruit and vegetables. Secondary school students have the opportunity to select at least three of these components, either at the regular food service line or at the quick-serve line.

A pilot satellite lunch program started last year as an economy measure, will be expanded. Last year the program was conducted by three Virginia Beach secondary school cafeterias in conjunction with three smaller elementary school cafeterias.

The larger cafeterias supply the main portion of the school lunches each day for the smaller cafeterias, using insulated food carriers and a transport van. The cafeterias at Kellam High, Plaza Junior High, and Independence Junior High assisted Court House and Plaza elementaries, and Old Donation Center for the Gifted and Talented, respectively.

Kellam provides for many

In addition to those schools, this year Kellam will also supply Creeds Elementary; Bayside Junior High will supply Williams Intermediate; Kemps Landing Intermediate will receive lunches from Kempsville Junior High and Pembroke Meadows Elementary will send lunches to Pembroke Elementary.

Virginia Beach Public Schools follow the guidelines of the U.S.D.A. in offering a school lunch which supplies the recommended daily nutritional requirements for children of various ages. The minimum daily requirements for a Type A meal are:

- A portion of meat or meat alternate such as cheese, eggs, or peanut butter.
- A portion of two or more vegetables or fruits.
- A serving of bread or bread alternate (noodles, etc.).
- A serving of milk.

In addition, a Vitamin A vegetable or fruit is required at least twice a week; a Vitamin C vegetable or fruit is served at least two or three times a week; several specific foods are served for iron each day.

Secondary school students may participate in the "offer versus serve" provision of the lunch program which recognizes that junior and senior high students have a special independent nature and a desire to exercise judgement in their choice of foods. "Offer versus serve" lets the students choose three, four or all five of the meal components; thus they can refuse foods they don't like, which reduces plate waste and increases student participation in the lunch program.

Beach lunch prices

The 1979-80 lunch price for elementary students will be 53¢, and the price for secondary school lunches will be 60¢. Milk is included in the price of each meal.

Students who bring their lunches may buy milk separately, and will have a choice of either low-fat or regular whole milk. Kindergartners may purchase inexpensive snacks. All adult lunches will cost $1. Lunch will be served beginning on the first day of school for students.

Applications for free or reduced lunch rates will be distributed at the beginning of the school year and will be available in each school office throughout the school year.

Almost $70 million sought

Council approves referendum

By LEE CAHILL

Sun City Council correspondent

City Council committees have recommended bond referendums to raise $68.9 million for water and sewer and road projects. The figure is close to half the amount originally proposed by the city administration.

Council is expected to concur with the recommendations next Monday evening with approval of the appropriate ordinances and at a second reading of the ordinances at a special meeting on Aug. 27 at 9 a.m.

The water and sewer committee recommended a $46 million double-barrel bond issue which will be repaid by water and sewer revenues. Charges of five cents per 1000 gallons of water and a sewer charge of 34 cents a month will fund the first $20 million of the bond referendum, according to the committee report.

The roads committee recommended a $22,890,287 issue for only the most essential roads over the next two or three years.

Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr. also directed a council committee to continue talks with the City of Norfolk concerning the water contract between Virginia Beach and Norfolk. Norfolk furnishes most of the Beach's water supply.

Councilman Reid Ervin, chairman, and Councilman Donald Merrick serve on the committee with city manager George L. Hanbury.

Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr. who served as chairman of the Road Committee, presented the report which recommended a bond referendum for Kempsville Road, Phase I, $4,964,608; Indian River Road, Phase II, $3,857,263; General Booth Boulevard, Phase I, $7,418,750; Bonney Road, $5,099,166; North Beach drainage, Phase II, $1,250,500, and Virginia Beach Boulevard from the Toll Road south to Jefferson Avenue, $300,000.

The committee had considered a $56 million road and drainage program.

The committee also recommended that the city ask the State to accept Kempsville Road, Phase II as a State/Federal project and to expedite roads which have been indefinitely deferred by the State because of the lack of State matching funds. These include but are not limited to Newtown Road, Great Neck Road, and Holland Road. The recommendation is that the funds from the Virginia Beach Boulevard project be transferred to "these more pressing priorities," but that the computerized signalization of Virginia Beach Boulevard and right of way acquisition for Virginia Beach Boulevard continue.

The committee further recommended that the city pursue discussion with its representatives to the General Assembly to amend the City Charter to allow greater bonding flexibility for the city. McCoy said there was a chance the city could increase its bonding limit "if we show we need this and put a limit on the amount." He said the city could accomplish this through a referendum or to go directly to the Legislature.

Councilman Clarence A. Holland, another member of the committee, said Newtown Road is the top priority for the Virginia Beach Boulevard funds.

Included in the water and sewer referendum will be: A previously authorized $9.1 million in revenue notes which will be replaced by double-barrel bonds, saving customers interest costs.

Twelve million dollars for water supply development of approximately 12 million gallons a day or one-third of the city's daily estimated usage. The development will be in fresh water wells and desalting operations.

Seven million dollars for sewer and water facilities work in connection with anticipated road and highway projects during the period so that roads will only have to be torn up once.

Eighteen million dollars in improvements to the general systems and installation of facilities in various existing neighborhoods.

Alpheus J. Chewning, III, who presented the report in the absence of chairman G. C. Gerald Harris, said that the Committee had looked over the city's water and sewer projects completed with the $39.9 million bond referendum approved by the citizens and decided that the city had "done a good job."

He said the city's performance so far should influence voters favorably on the proposed referendum. He pointed out that water supply projects were not included in the original program.

McCoy said he did not see "why we won't proceed with it just as you did it."

The committee pared down more than $60 million in proposed water and sewer projects to arrive at the $46 million figure.

Included water projects are:

A control center, $88,624; First Colonial Road, $75,000; Lynnhaven parkway, $120,000; Independence Boulevard, $18,000; Kempsville Road main, $244,550; Indian River Road main, $275,000; Witchduck Road main, Phase II, $200,000; desalting plant, $1,315,784; fresh groundwater test development program, $1,605,000; Freshwater production well fields, $1,520,000; freshwater treatment plants, $6,400,000; brackish water test and development program, $691,000; Pembroke water treatment plant improvements, $425,000; Virginia Beach Boulevard, $660,000; South Lynnhaven Road, $585,000; and Providence Road Main, Phase V, $630,000.

The remainig $9.1 million is for the water and sewer projects already approved.

Food stamp manpower

The City of Virginia Beach has had to more than double its food stamp personnel to process applications which have increased by 399 percent during the past 12 to 15 months.

Mrs. Frances Elrod, Social Services director, attributed the dramatic rise in food stamp applications as well as the 63 percent increase in public assistance caseloads to the general economy and inflation.

Resorts are generally the last to be hit, she said. Other cities throughout the country started to experience the same problem earlier.

The people now applying for food stamps are not the people usually on the public welfare rolls, she said. Some are employed but their incomes are not high enough to sustain them. She said, however, that no particular groups—the aged, the young or minorities—are making up the increase. Rather, the applications come from a cross-section of the population.

At an informal meeting of Council Monday afternoon, Mrs. Elrod said that graphs show a steady upward climb in applications for food stamps and that she could see no indication that the demand will level off.

Council at the formal session later approved an appropriation of $180,306 to add the 15 positions to the 13 already employed to process food stamp applications.

The city's share will be $36,061 with the State and Federal government paying the rest.

Mrs. Elrod said the 8,725 persons are now receiving public assistance from the Social Services Department and 3,874 are receiving food stamps. The Department employs 45 public assistance workers.

The staff can process up to 40 applications a day but has up to 70 people applying in one day, averging 57 a day. She said that the military installations are organizing a campaign to refer military personnel to apply for food stamps. She said that about 5,000 military families in Tidewater are expected to be eligible and a great number of these live in Virginia Beach. She said, however, that the military has helped to train their own personnel to screen the applicants which will make the city's job easier.

She said that the Department has criteria for determining whether the applicant is a Beach resident and also cooperates with other cities to make sure that one applicant does not receive stamps from more than one jurisdiction. She said that the city also is becoming more skilled at detecting fraud.

At present there are over 1000 food stamp applications and 500 public assistance cases pending the processing procedure. The Department also is required to process a food stamp application where the applicant has no income in two days.

With the influx of military applications just beginning, Mrs. Elrod can't see the situation getting any better.

Kempsville putting out fires

For all those people out there who have watched the Kempsville firefighters hosing down the shrubbery along Princess Anne Road —

They were not watering the shrubbery; they were putting out fires.

Fire Chief Harry Diezel told City Council Monday afternoon that fire had broken out in the pine and cedar mulch used on the strip. Fourteen times the station was called out to put out the blaze and 14 times firefighters answered the call, "watering" the median strip. After one citizen complained that the city was setting a bad example in water conservation, Diezel said he received 14 calls before taking the phone off the hook. We went out 14 times, he said, and the lady must have driven by 13 of the 14 times.

Crackdown on arson

The Virginia Beach Fire Department, experiencing an upsurge in arson along with the rest of the country, is taking a no-nonsense approach toward arsonists. As a result, Fire Chief Harry Diezel said, the Beach record of arrests and convictions is four to five times better than the national average.

Capt. James Hundley, who heads the city's four-man arson squad, said, however, that the national record was "pretty poor" with a 15 percent arrest rate and a nine percent conviction rate. The Beach record ranges from a 34 percent arrest - 85 percent conviction rate from 1978 statistics to a recent report of a 27 percent arrest - 87-88 percent conviction rate.

Hundley said that Virginia Beach has gone a long way toward having one of the best set-ups in the nation, but that there was still room for improvement and that people had to get involved. The investigative unit was started with a two-man team in 1969, and increased to four during the last four or five years. He said that he would like not only to maintain the present level of arrests and convictions, but to improve it. He said he hoped to add another investigator in the 1981-82 budget.

Virginia Beach suffers over $2 million in losses from arson-related fires each year. The national cost is $1.7 billion in direct losses and $15 billion in related losses.

The subject came up at the informal session of City Council Monday afternoon when Councilman Clarence A. Holland asked Chief Diezel whether there had been a sudden surge in arson. He referred to a report from a Pennsylvania city where the fire chief ordered his men to shoot fleeing suspected arsonists.

Chief Diezel agreed that arson is increasing and that Virginia Beach shares the arson problem with the rest of the country. He said that the Beach's record of arrests and convictions was four to five times better than the national average.

He said the Beach has concentrated on the problem more intensely for the past six years.

Captain Hundley said there has been an increase in arson in all categories and on all types of properties. The squad last Thursday had under investigation 12 car burnings of which only three were accidents.

People set fire for profit expecting the insurance company to bail them out of a poor economical situation. The worsening economy may have triggered more of this type of arson.

They also set fire for spite or revenge or just for kicks, Hundley said.

Juvenile fire setters are the number one problem in the nation, however, and the Beach has a program providing for counseling the fire setters.

Hundley said that August has been a busy month, but that he doesn't know "what sparked it all."

Hundley is eliciting the cooperation of citizens to help by reporting any suspicious actions through the Tidewater hotline - 623 Fire. The number in Norfolk serves the cities on the southside and the Peninsula communities are served by the hotline number 599 Fire. The hotlines were provided through a Federal grant received by the City of Norfolk.

Since January the squad has had 222 cases to investigate of which 143 to 150 involve criminal action.

Through his association with the U.S. Fire Administration Hundley has the opportunity to learn about problems in other communities and concludes that Virginia Beach has one of the best set-ups.

Squad members are trained like police officers, have police authority and carry firearms. Ninety percent of the investigations require police skills, Hundley said.

Diezel, invited by Council to discuss fire prevention requirements for high rise apartments for the elderly, said that the increased requirements add $2 a square foot to construction costs. The added precautions will contain smoke as well as fire to a single room at the point of origin.

He pointed out that these requirements can be made only in cases where a conditional use permit is involved which gives the city the opportunity to make additional demands. He said that some apartments can be built under the regular apartment code and only later cater to the elderly.

City Manager George L. Hanbury said that an early warning device would probably have saved the three children who recently died in a fire in the Plaza area.

Diezel said the fire equipment can reach from six to ten floors and that it took 140 persons per call to a high rise fire. In defense of the developer, he said, everything done for fire prevention is expensive and the builder needs trade-offs to help keep costs down.

More Beach condo's?

Virginia Beach City Council Monday afternoon took action which City manager George L. Hanbury warned would result in more condominium development just to avoid having to build curbs, gutters and sidewalks.

Roads, gutters, under discussion

Council waived curbs, gutters and sidewalks for a proposed condominium of single-family homes on Little Neck Point. Attorney Calvin P. Spain, representing James D. Parker, the owner of the 20-acre parcel, said that 15 or 16 single-family houses will be constructed on the site with a single entrance road from Harris Road.

Since the road would be private, Spain said the developer wanted Council to waive curbs, gutters, sidewalks and underground drainage, substituting swales instead to maintain the rural atmosphere of the area and for privacy. Under the state's condominium law an association of the owners would be required to maintain property held in common.

Hanbury said that the development may be a condominium but the road is still a road in a subdivision. He said that calling the development a condominium is just a way to get around the city's code which calls for curbs, gutters and sidewalks and underground drainage in subdivisions.

If the request is approved, Hanbury said, the city will see more condominium groups just to avoid curbs and gutters. In fact, the administration will next week propose an ordinance amending the Comprehensive Zoning Ordinance stipulating that condominiums should have to adhere to the same requirements as any subdivision.

Hanbury said that the city had already made a concession to Parker, that it would accept a 20 foot road instead of the standard 30 foot road.

Councilman Reid Ervin wanted to know whether the Virginia Condominium law was adequate to protect the owners.

Spain said the law is considered a model one in the United States. It requires stating what will be owned in common and the road will be owned in common, he said. He said that the condo organization can be disbanded. However, the organization will have to comply with city requirements for subdivisions if it does.

Parker said, "I can't see what's so all-fired holy about curbs and gutters."

Councilman John A. Baum wanted to be sure that the city could protect itself and would not be left to improve a substandard road in later years under political pressure.

Spain said that Parker was willing to write in legal protection for the city.

City attorney Dale Bimson said, however, that there is no track record in court on how it looks at various statutes relating to the problem.

Hanbury insisted it was a dangerous precedent because condos are the cheapest way to develop property and developers would choose that avenue.

Councilman Donald Merrick moved that curbs, gutters and sidewalks be waived and that an agreement be included that stipulates that if the condominium association is dissolved, the owners must comply with all subdivision ordinances.

The motion was passed by a vote of 6-5. Voting against the proposal were John A. Baum, Barbara Henley, Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr., Meyera oberndorf and Patrick Standing.

MOMENTS FOR MEDITATION

There are those who await the moment when they will be called upon to do some great thing. They waste their lives hoping for an opportunity that never comes.

I have learned that life is not composed of great events. Some come along to be sure: marriage, the birth of a child, the meeting of some great artist but mostly, day by day, little things claim all of our attention. Suddenly we discover that one can do little things as a result of great motives.

A mother reads Bible stories every night to her little family. However tired she is, she believes that this is important and she does it. Her great motive is a belief that a knowledge of God obtained from His word, is the single most valuable asset any child can acquire and it is best acquired when one is a child.

It is a great thing to be able to convert one's life into a fountain when one is surrounded by the thirsty to become a nourishing piece of food when one is faced with hungry friends.

And to do all of this for the glory of God, not for the praise of men—that's a great thing believe me!

As is the darkness, so shall thy power of sight be.
As is the danger, so shall thy courage be.*

Red Cross needs money to pay for Allen damage

The American Red Cross, Tidewater Chapter, is accepting donations from Virginia Beach to aid victims of Hurricane Allen.

During Allen's rampage through the Texas Coastal area, 365 Red Cross shelters were set up housing 136,000 people. More than 4,000 families were affected by flood damage. Preliminary estimates show that Red Cross alone will spend $2.5 million in that area.

Donations for providing aid to victims should be in the form of checks made payable to American Red Cross Disaster Relief. Checks may be mailed to the Tidewater Chapter, 611 W. Brambleton Avenue, Norfolk 23510.

Cement from old tires

A Japanese tire firm and a cement company have jointly developed a process that used old tires in the manufacture of cement.

The tires are chopped up and put in a kiln at temperatures from 1,200 to 1,500 degrees centigrade. The carbon and rubber in them burn, while the sulfur is converted to gypsum and the steel to ferric or ferrous oxide.

Jobs go to women

In 1979 nearly two-thirds of the 2.1 million new jobs in the United States went to women, says the Labor Department, which thinks the trend seems likely to continue.

Greg Goldfarb—Sun

A Virginia Beach native, Mike Wareing has been lifting weights off and on all his life, but only seriously for about two years. Nevertheless, he makes dumb bell pressing 65 pounds look easy. The 26 year old proprietor of Wareing's Gym, Atlantic Avenue, Wareing used to live in Cocoa Beach, FL, where he was a school teacher and wrestling coach. "But I wanted to come back to the Beach," he said. "This is where my family and friends are. My father, John, started the gym years ago. Now my brothers, Bob, Jack and Tony and myself run it." Wareing lives in the resort area of the Beach, and is single. His hobbies include surfing and boxing.

Beach restaurant manager

Worrells: Not afraid of hard work

By GREG GOLDFARB, editor
The Virginia Beach Sun

At the ripe young age of 22, the English born Beach resident Bill Worrells is the manager of one of the most popular nightspots at the Beach.

He works up to 12 hours a day, seven days a week over the summer as the manager of Peabody's. But he does not complain about hours. He's sure that hard work, which he is not afraid of, will gain him everything he wants out of life.

"Hard work is where it's at," Worrells said.

"I'll do whatever is necessary to make the club be successful; whether it's pumping beer; throwing out drunks; waiting on tables if a waitress is sick; or cleaning the toilets!

"I think I have a lot of responsibility for my age. Managing a club the size of Peabody's is both a grand challenge, and a golden opportunity. Both of which I'm very thankful for, and don't intend to take for granted."

Part of a military family

Worrells is the son of a military family, consequently, his reason for being born in Liverpool, England. His father, Billy, is now a retired Air Force sergeant; his mother, Joan, is a housewife. Worrells has three sisters, and one brother: Sharon, 20, a student at a local college, and employed with the Virginia Beach recreation Center/Kempsville; Debbie, 18, married and living in Texas; Paul, 16, a freshman at First Colonial High School; and Angela, 14, a seventh grader at Virginia Beach Junior High School.

Worrells finished his elementary school education on the island of Crete, off the coast of Greece.

"It would be a great place to spend a honeymoon", he recalls fondly. "It's really a pretty place."

He attended Junior High School in Deluth, Minn., and high school in Rome, N.Y. where he lettered in baseball, wrestling, and track.

"I played third base; wrestled at 132 pounds; and ran the 440 relay and the 100 yard dash," Worrells said with a smile. "And just to emphasize how athletics doesn't necessarily mean that a students' grades have to drop, I was a member of the honor roll society."

Worrells father decided to move from New York to the Beach in 1979, thus causing the rising senior at Rome Free Academy to leave his three-year classmates, and athletic companions.

"Hard work is where it's at. I'll do whatever is necessary to make the club (Peabody's) successful"—Worrells

Did he mind moving around?

"It was nice," he said. "It'd be bad leaving your friends; but the only consolation was, of course, you always meet new ones."

But before moving directly to the Beach from N. Y., the family paused first in Chesapeake.

In Chesapeake, Worrells graduated from Deep Creek High School, where he was a member of the varsity wrestling team, lettering there also.

After 12 years of school, however, Worrells decided it was time to take a break, and go to work for awhile.

Still living in Chesapeake, he became a construction framing foreman for his uncle, Melvin Capps, who still builds homes in the largely rural city.

Worrells worked at the job for two years, thus giving him the experience necessary to earn a living later in life if he ever found himself caught between jobs. But he left that occupation in pursuit of higher goals.

"I've always known that I have a good mind," Worrells said, "and I wanted an occupation in which I could use it, and exercise it. I was tired of physical labor, which required more brawn than brains. The money wasn't bad, but it is not more than I make now."

Moved to Beach

Because Worrells birthday falls on October 7, he had graduated high school at the age of 17; so, after working for his uncle two years, was only 19 when he moved to Virginia Beach.

Initially, Worrells started attending Old Dominion University, Norfolk, devoting his time to a double major, political science, and criminology. He also wrestled at ODU.

At the same time, he began working at Rogue's Club on Virginia Beach Boulevard as a dish washer. (Both Rogue's and Peabody's are owned by Beach businessmen Ed Ruffin and Nabil Kassir.)

But the heavy demands on his time forced Worrells to quit ODU after one year, and begin a year of studies at the closer Beach campus of Tidewater Community College.

"During that period of time," Worrells remembers, "I had an unbelievable schedule."

"I woke up at 6:30 a.m. to make my 8 a.m. class. I continued to meet classes until 12 noon, after which time, I would study from 12 to 2 p.m. Next I would lift weights from 2 to 3 p.m. in preparation for wrestling practice which went from 3:30 to 6:30 p.m."

"Then it was back home for dinner and a shower, and up to Rogue's by 8 p.m. to start working for the night. Most nights, I didn't get off until 2:30 in the morning. I'd go back home, sleep, and be up again at 6 a.m. Needless to say, I couldn't keep that pace up for more than about two semesters."

"I began classes at TCC, but ran into the same problems allocating time between studies and my work. I eventually quit there, also, because I started moving up in the company. But I plan to finish my college education later."

Worrells involved with politics

Worrells was soon promoted from dishwasher to bartender after two months; from bartender to assistant head bartender after three months; from assistant head bartender to bar manager after two months, and finally to assistant club manager after one more month.

But the best was yet to come.

"Last April," Worrells said proudly, "Ruffin and Kassir offered me the job of manager of Peabody's. I accepted it."

During the course of working in the food/beverage and entertainment business, Worrells got an opportunity to get involved in some political lobbying in Richmond.

Attending sessions of the General Assembly, as part of the Virginia Beach Restaurant Association's delegation, he found himself actively involved in the repeal of certain local food and drink taxes imposed on Beach restaurants by the Assembly.

"The State of Virginia was making a profit," Worrells stated strongly, "off the taxes we were paying on serving food and drink."

"What really angered us, however, is that the tax money the State was collecting was not going back into a general fund, which could then be funneled back to the local municipalities. They were placing the tax money in a special fund, like a slush fund, to be used however the Assembly voted."

"The Beach restaurant association felt it was unfair to have to pay a tax that benefited only the State, and nobody else."

Worrells plans to continue his present job indefinitely, "still learning the business, with the goal of opening a restaurant of my own later," he said.

Worrells enjoys working for Nassir and Ruffin, of whom he said, "It's good to work for owners who are very active in their profession, and who keep a watchful eye on their investments."

"They are very fair and conscientious; and I have learned, and am still learning very much from them. They have given me an opportunity for which I'm very grateful."

Been snow skiing 12 years

Worrells' hobbies include a girlfriend from Indian River, which he met while attending Deep Creek High, who now attends Radford University; snow skiing, fishing, and working out.

"I have been a snow skier for 12 years," Worrells said looking forward to the winter months when he will only have to work at the most, four nights a week.

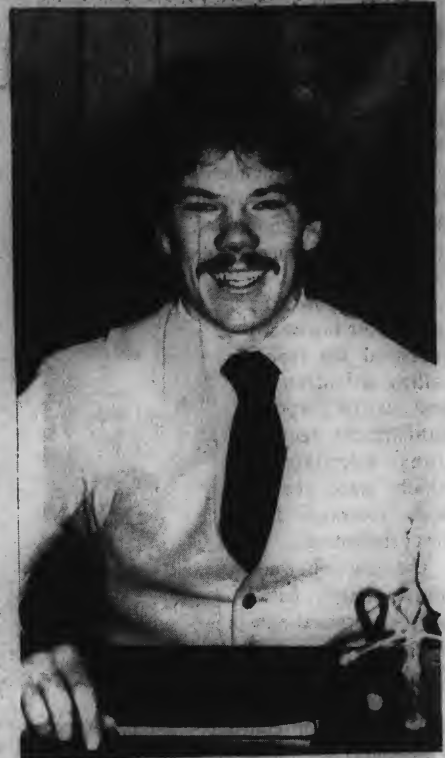

"I work out with weights at least every other day at a local health spa," he said, but I hope eventually to be able to work out at Wareing's gym, Virginia Beach Boulevard."

"I'm down on drugs...if my employees come in messed up, I send them home!"—Worrells

But fishing is the hobby which most directly contrasts the fast paced style of working at the Beach during tourist season, and the solitude of it when they have gone.

"During the summer the Beach is fast paced, with a lot of different people doing a lot of different things," Worrells said.

"But in the fall, winter, and spring, after they're gone, is when I can really kick back and enjoy myself. I particularly enjoy the sport fishing I do, which encompasses both surf casting and pier."

Worrells does not drink. Neither does he indulge himself in drugs or tabacos.

"I'm down on drugs," Worrells said. Not only do I not drink or do any drugs. If any one of my employees come in messed up I send them home!

"My parents had a big influence on me concerning drugs and alcohol. I want to keep straight, and do well in my life. I know a lot of people come in Peabody's and drink, but I don't mind. I love to see people having a good time, even if they have to drink to do it. I just try to have a good time naturally."

Finally, will the bachelor get married?

"It's fate for us all," he quietly confessed.

Will print more garments

Peabody's announces expansion

Peabody's, Inc., a Virginia Beach conglomerate, which started as a silk screen T-shirt printing operation in 1967, will break ground August 26, 1980 for a new $1 million general office facility and garment printing complex in Oceana West Industrial Park.

City Officials Dr. Henry McCoy, Mayor of Virginia Beach; Mr. George Hanbury, city manager; Mr. A. James Debellis, director, department of economic development; Mr. Al Craft, chairman, Virginia Beach development authority; Senator Joe Canada; and Mr. Jeff Dyckman, senior vice president, Central Fidelity Bank will join Peabody's owners Nabil D. Kassir and Edmund C. Ruffin and other guests for the event.

The 22,000 square foot building will house the latest garment printing equipment available in the industry when completed. It was financed by industrial development bonds from the city that were purchased by Central Fidelity Bank.

Kassir said construction will begin immediately and the plant should be in operation by the first of the year.

He added, "The new plant will greatly expand and modernized our printing operation. We will be able to print all types of sports garments, handbags, hats, gym shorts, and paper products."

Ruffin said the company will also sell T-shirt blanks wholesale at the plant.

Ruffin said Peabody's has 10 retail outlets in seven states along the middle and south Atlantic coast and has plans to open 10 other stores this year.

He said Peabody's has projected sales of more than $3 million this year.

The operation employs about 120 people in both the printing and retail outlets and has an annual payroll of $600,000.

Worrells a good boss?

Sure, Bill Worrells thinks he's a good boss. But what does someone who works for him all the time think?

"Bill is a great boss," said Peabody's head waitress and 18 month Beach resident Kim Lawrence, 20.

"He's always there when you need him," she said. "If I ever need a shoulder to cry on or just to discuss something with him he always helps. He always puts me in a good mood, and he always trusts my judgment. That means a lot."

Lawrence also said that since Worrells has been manager of Peabody's the number of waitresses she has to replace for quitting has dropped dramatically.

"I think the employees like Bill pretty well," Lawrence said.

"It wasn't like that before Bill was manager; waitresses were always quitting. But now, I've only had one quit this year. Most of us are real proud of him."

Spanked with what? How often?

By GREG GOLDFARB, editor,
The Virginia Beach Sun

Recently, superintendent E. E. Brickell submitted a committee report to the Virginia Beach School for approval. The report was a corporal punishment policy revision, with provisions.

By a whoping nine to one vote the Board approved the report calling attention to new, stricter corporal punishment regulations. Regulations which had always been assumed, but never spelled out.

The new policy addresses itself, basically, to corporal punishment before it is conducted and after it is concluded. It has no language in it relative to the punishment as it is actually administered.

The new policy is also vague.

If Virginia Beach is going to actively employ a corporal punishment policy, it should be clear and complete. Beach residents should have to assume nothing when it comes to their children.

Let's assume, A paddle is used

For example, we assume the spankings are administered with a paddle. But under the present policy, a student could be spanked with a paddle, switch, belt, strap, rod, hand, stick, or whatever the spankor chooses.

Shouldn't he have some restrictions?

For the sake of this story, however, assume a student is being spanked with a paddle. The question here is, for how long must the student, or will the student be spanked? Under the present policy, the duration and severity of the spankings is undetermined.

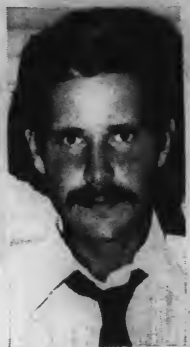

These decisions are left to the desgression of the principal or his assistant.

Brickell says the policy is specific enough, and that there is not much occasion at the Beach to use the punishment. Maybe that is why he doesn't know how it is administered in Beach schools, or how long each corporal punishment session lasts.

"I came here in 1966," Brickell said, "and since then I've seen a lot of different problems. But in Virginia Beach we have a good student body, with very little trouble compared to other systems.

"But if there is any trouble which causes a student to be corporally punished, we rely on the principals and their assistants to administer it properly.

"I've never been in a school office while a child was being spanked. I don't know what the teacher uses to do it with. I assume they use their hand, but I don't know. If a student is ever hurt, though, has recourse if it can be proved that the administrator used cruel and inhumane punishment.

"Because it is up to the administrator to administer corporal punishment, and as I said, I'm not there while it's done, I don't know how long the spankings last either. I assume they don't last too long.

cial's office;" and a record be kept of all spankings. But the policy gives no provisions for review if the new regulations aren't adhered to.

The new policy also doesn't say that a parent has the power to withhold permission for corporal punishment to be administered to their child.

SUN EDITORIAL

"These are silly, simple minded points. The School Board has too many policies to be that specific on all of them. Where would we draw the line?

"I don't know what the committee's thinking was on preparing this report. I didn't attend any of its meetings."

Will parents be notified, always?

Prior to administering corporal punishment, the new policy states that the administrator should make a "reasonable effort" to notify the parent or guardian of the child. But according to Brickell, he is unsure if that means a phonecall, a letter, or that anything will actually be done before the punishment is administered.

Brickell says we must also assume that a child's mental health will be considered before corporal punishment is administered, although nowhere in the policy is it written. School administrators are now trained child psychologists?

The policy also says that the administrator, in regard to corporal punishment, must have a witness present; it must be administered in the "privacy of the principal's or assistant prin-

Abolish corporal punishment

Virginia would not be alone in abolishing corporal punishment entirely. Massachusetts, Hawaii, New Jersey, and Maine have already done it; as well as all private day care centers, the military, and prisons. In addition, many cities and counties have also outlawed it.

In light of the fact there is no evidence to prove that corporal punishment is an effective behavior modifier, and it has obvious repercussions later in life (see chart above) it should be banned in Beach schools. Especially in schools where the superintendent doesn't even know how it's being done.

Chesapeake Light Race set

By GREG GOLDFARB, editor,
The Virginia Beach Sun

"We're really proud for our business to be involved in a community project such as the Second Annual Chesapeake Light Race," said race sponsor and co-owner of Worrell Brothers Restaurant, Jim Johnson.

"Most of the people putting on the race sail themselves, so it's only natural to put on a sailing race. This year, however, is special because all race proceeds will be donated to the St. Jude's Children's Hospital."

Watch from the Beach

The 36 mile race will take place on Saturday, Sept. 6. The race will begin and end at Camp Pendleton, which will also serve as a vantage point for spectators. On race day, the Virginia Beach Jaycees will be directing free parking and selling concessions, T-shirts and other related race items.

Over 100 multi, and monohull boats are expected to compete in this year's event, which is a good increase over last year's race.

"Last year," said Johnson, "we had 58 boats competing, which was very good for the races' first year. This year, however, we will have at least 100 boats. The irony of it though, is that the registration fee increased this year from $25 a boat last year to $50 a boat this year. We raised the fee to eliminate the novices, and to raise more money for St. Jude's."

Race co-chairman and restaurant co-owner Chris Worrell said this year's race is unique because it allows competitive sailing to be a spectator sport.

"Normally, most sailing races take place so far off shore the competitors are not visible from the shoreline," Worrell said.

"But this year, the last 10 miles of the race, or the finishing leg of it, will come right up the Virginia Beach coast; starting North end and heading South. This way, spectators will be afforded the opportunity to view the most exciting part of the race while they're already out having a good time on the beach.

"Since the entire race will only last four to seven hours, depending on the wind, we're looking forward to one big day of sailing. We hope people take advantage of the free parking at the south end of Crowtan Beach and will play volleyball and frisbee while waiting for the boats to come in."

Jaycees involved

Carl Farris, Virginia Beach Jaycee and race committee member said the Jaycee's participation in the race marks the end of the Jaycees summer programming; and promotes the organization's basic goals and objectives.

"For the Jaycees," Farris said, "The race symbolizes the end of the youth and community oriented summer programs. It also ties in with the purpose of the non-profit chapter. That is, raising money for a worthwhile goal, such as St. Jude's."

"The race will be good for the community because, whereas the Worrell 1000 sailing race started out local and now has gained national, if not international recognition for Virginia Beach, the Chesapeake Light Race, has the same potential.

"The race is a non-profit event just as the Jaycees are a non-profit organization. We hope to be able to donate at least $5,000 to the children's hospital. The Jaycees as a group will assist the race in any way possible on the day of the race."

Helping to promote the race for Johnson and Worrell is Paige Beal, a promotions director for a local radio station.

"My station is involved with the event," Beal said, "for several reasons."

"We will be broadcasting from the beach on race day."

"But we also feel that the Chesapeake Light Race is a worthwhile event because money will be donated to a worthy cause; and it is good for the radio station to get involved in a community event that is produced so well."

"I know the Jaycees are a thorough organization and that they'll come through with what they say they'll do. I think it will be a great race, and I enjoy very much working with the sponsors."

Register at Worrell's

Those interested in competing in this year's race have until Saturday, August 30 to sign up at Worrell Brother's, on Atlantic Avenue.

Princess Anne Road; False Cape

The State Highway and Transportation Commission Thursday approved plans for a new location for part of Princess Anne Road (VA 165) in Virginia Beach.

Involved in the project is the 1.6-mile stretch of Princess Anne Road between Edwin Drive and Windsor Oaks Boulevard.

At a public hearing in June, two locations were presented. The commission approved Line 2, (see illustration) which had received the most support at the hearing. This plan utilizes the existing road from Edwin Drive to the Hanover Drive area, with widening planned on the north side.

From Hanover Drive to Salem Road there will be a jamor relocation to the north of the existing road. This will continue to an intersection with Salem Road where the new road will overlap Princess Anne Road to Windsor Oaks Boulevard. This will provide safer and better access to the Gallops Farm naval housing development, located north of existing Princess Anne Road.

The opening of the navy housing development, along with the Carper Apartments on both sides of Windsor Oaks Boulevard, has increased traffic using this portion of Princess Anne Road to a point where the road is nearing its capacity.

The new stretch of road will have two traffic lanes in each direction, with a 16-foot grass median. Curb, gutter and a sidewalk will be placed on each side of the road.

Between 16,000 and 20,000 vehicles use the 1.6-mile stretch of Princess Anne Road between Edwin Drive and Windsor Oaks Road each day. By the year 2000, traffic is predicted to be between 29,700 and 40,000 vehicles a day.

The project is anticipated to cost $3,830,600. Since it was requested by the navy and approved by the Federal Highway Administration, it will be financed by federal defense access funds and the city of Virginia Beach.

A public hearing on design features will be held before construction begins.

False Cape bikeway

An allocation of $75,000 in recreational access funds was approved Thursday by the State Highway and Transportation Commission for a bikeway in False Cape State Park in the City of Virginia Beach.

The proposed bikeway access would link the park's contact station, located near the park's northern boundary, with the main park headquarters. It will be 3.2 miles long and cost an estimated $125,000.

The award was made contingent upon the Division of State Parks granting the necessary right-of-way and matching on a dollar-for-dollar basis $25,000 of the recreational access fund allocation for a total fund of $100,000.

The parks division also agreed to provide for all costs in excess of the $100,000 available from the recreational access allocation and the matching fund and to assume responsibility of the maintenance of the bikeway after construction.

The Commission of Outdoor Recreation concurred in the recommendation for the funds.

City Council news

$22.9 million approved for highways

By LEE CAHILL

Sun City Council correspondent

Opposition to Virginia Beach's proposed $46 million water and sewer bond issue surfaced early when Councilwoman Reba McClanan Monday evening voted against the bond authorization.

McClanan did, however, vote for the $22.9 million bond issue for highway improvements.

The issues will be placed on a referendum on the Nov. 4 ballot.

McClanan said that there are "unresolved things" from the $39.9 million bond issue which was approved by referendum in 1977. McClanan said that she was president of the Council of Civic Organizations at the time and had requested information from Public Utilities director Aubrey Watts. "Watts said he would keep us up to date on what was done with the money and he did not do so," she said.

Council presented no opposition to the 1977 issue although Councilwoman Meryera Oberndorf, of the 11 Council members, cast the sole negative vote on the motion. She said she supported the referendum but preferred placing it on the general election ballot in November rather than on the June 14 ballot.

The vote on the water and sewer bond issue was 9-1 and on the road bonds 10-councilman Clarence A. Holland was absent. The second reading was scheduled for a special meeting on Wednesday morning at 9 a.m.

Councilman Donald Merrick said that the city prepared an annual audit report for the public on the bond expenditures.

Councilman Reid Ervin maintained, "We spent the money as we said we would."

Merrick said he was convinced that "everything was spent exactly as we said."

Councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf said that "if the referendum is passed, I would not want it under a cloud."

Ervin said he hoped Mrs. McClanan would reconsider because "we need your help in selling these bonds."

Mrs. McClanan said she had to be realistic and the amount requested was "entirely too much."

Councilman John A. Baum said the General Assembly has forced the city to finance projects in this way because of restraints on bonding authority.

McClanan retorted that the restraints were in the city charter which Council approved.

Councilman Patrick L. Standing said that each year Council has requested the General Assembly to change the charter. He said that maybe he should vote no too, so that the General Assembly would have to do something. The last time we were told that if we (didn't furnish the improvements) the judge would make us."

McClanan said that she favored the referendum process. "The public should be aware." In fact, McClanan agitated for a referendum during the 1977 bond discussions.

Ervin said he could understand cutting out specific projects, but not in just cutting the total amount in half. Of the total, $9.1 million will represent a savings for the city because it will replace lower rate interest bonds for higher interest bonds for already approved projects.

Ervin asked McClanan to tell him the projects she wants cut out.

Merrick said that "we have two bond issues that are going to be difficult to sell and we've got to work fast."

Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr. plans to appoint committees to promote the bond issues.

Rudee Inlet dredging

The City of Virginia Beach will ask for bids on dredging Rudee Inlet at an estimated cost of $375,000.

City Council Monday evening authorized city manager George L. Hanbury to ask for bids for the dredging and the location of a sand trap at the inlet. The sand from the dredging will be used to replenish the beach at 16th, 17th and 18th Streets.

Hanbury said that the same problem surfaces every year at the start of the fishing season. The inlet fills up making it difficult or impossible for boats to get in or out.

He said the last time the city called in a commercial dredge for a similar operation was in 1972.

Joseph McDonald, of the Beach Erosion Commission, said the bids will be based on withdrawal of 100,000 cubic yards of material.

Councilman Patrick L. Standing said that many people will look at the cost and it can all be gone. He said of sand replenishment, "I'm beginning to think it's a waste of money."

Councilman Reid Ervin remarked that the best thing to do would be to leave nature alone.

McDonald said that situations exist from Miami to Maine. The only satisfactory solution is to nourish the beach he said.

Ervin remarked that the Corps of Engineers are "talking about getting sand off the continental shelf! Everything that man has done has destroyed the beaches."

McDonald said the Corps of Engineers has made a study of Rudee Inlet and the Coastal Engineering System which hasn't been released yet.

Hanbury added that the city's hurricane protection plan includes asking the Corps to take over Rudee Inlet.

Beach sand replenishment will come from Rudee Inlet; Council approves $375,000 for dredging.

First complete bike plan

Virginia Beach has released a comprehensive bikeway plan believed to be the first by any jurisdiction in the region.

The plan is designed for the utilitarian and the recreational bicycle riders in mind and links recreational centers, shopping areas and schools.

City planner Robert Scott told City Council Monday evening at an informal session that public hearings are planned and that meetings will be scheduled with various civic organizations.

H. Jack Jennings and Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr., constituting the Mayor's committee on bikeways, have Public Works, Parks and Recreation, and Police Department. The Department of Planning prepared the plan which will be considered by the Planning Commission. Copies will be available in all public libraries.

Virginia Beach already has constructed more than 22 miles of bikeways which includes three classes. The bikeways separated from the roadway by a physical barrier, a marked trail on the side of the roadway and bikeways designated only by signs.

Scott said the committee prepared the plan with safety foremost in mind. With the increased use of bicycles, the accident rate for bicyclists in Virginia Beach has grown to .8 percent of the reported accidents for a total of 82 bicycle related accidents with an average monthly total of reported bicycle accidents from Jan. 1977 to October 1979 of 7.9.

He said there are now more than 83,000 registered bicycles in the city but the total number is estimated to exceed 100,000.

The report divides the city into nine study areas, contains maps and detailed listings of each project.

The city has been awarded a $75,000 grant from the Federal Highway Administration through the State Department of Highways and Transportation for improvements to the Oceanfront loop Bikeway. City Council Monday adopted the resolution requesting the funding for which there is a local match of $18,750 (25 percent of the total).

In addition to the nine study areas, the plan includes the east-west bikeway from the Kempsville Study area near the Norfolk City boundary to the Atlantic Avenue and 9th Street paralleling the Norfolk and Southern Railway Line.

The Naval Air Station Oceana Loop will be constructed in cooperation with the Navy and is outside the Capital Improvement timetable.

Members of the Planning Commission and the Parks and Recreation Commission attended the plan presentation with Council Monday.

Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr. said that the east-west bikeway and originally been considered the primary east-west bikeway but "has been put on a back burner" because of citizen opposition.

He said that Jack Jennings "has been the force behind this thing."

Illegal property taking

With a fence here, shrubs there, a patio or walkway elsewhere, Virginia Beach property owners are taking over property that isn't theirs but the public's.

Virginia Beach City Council is planning to change this situation by establishing a policy aimed against encroachments.

Property owners encroach for convenience, aesthetics, privacy, to keep intruders at bay, but for whatever reason the end result is that the public is denied the use of public property.

The city last October started a crackdown on North Virginia Beach oceanfront residents who have encroached on the beach with walkways, gazebos, patios and other obstructions in an area where public land is in great demand. At its informal session on Sept. 8 Council will discuss a policy which could be applied uniformly with a vote scheduled for Sept. 15.

In the meantime, Council Monday denied the request of Richard S. Bartley for an encroachment into 15 feet of city property for the installation of landscaping, planters and steps to the beach at 46th Street. Council also permitted a temporary encroachment into a portion of the right of way of 44th Street to William M. Harris for a fence in front of his home at 110 44th Street until curbs and gutters can be installed.

In the North Virginia Beach survey 1st September, 200 encroachments were identified, city planner Tom Hansen said. Sixty-four of the property owners have been notified that the encroachments have to be removed. Thirty of these have requested Council allow the encroachments to remain but only 14 of them have made a formal request to retain the structures. Thirty-four have already been removed.

With a more encompassing policy, it is likely that many of the property owners who have not already been notified about removing obstructions will be told to do so. Any of these, about 64, have been considered "permanent" structures and include walkways which may in the future be outlawed.

Don't forget the living things around Beach house

By GARY HAMILTON

Special to The Sun

Most of us living in Virginia Beach enjoy having plants grow around our dwellings. However, we're probably overlooking the extra benefits, both aesthetic and functional, to be derived from the many available varieties of living things.

When included in the original plans for a building, trees, bushes, and plants can greatly enhance the spatial effectiveness of the architecture. Even when considered during renovation, architects can use foliage to dramatically influence the beauty, comfort and efficiency of almost every building.

Informed intuition

Different approaches to utilizing the environment have ranged from the "informed intuition" of the original settlers to the scientific, energy efficiency studies conducted on today's modern buildings. Even without performing hour-by-hour sun/shade/wind studies on a building site, an architect can design an outdoor space that is not only in aesthetic and functional harmony with a structure, but also furthers energy conservation.

For residential architecture, the essential considerations are space, light, heat, and practicality. For instance, the architect and homeowner should consider whether the outdoor spaces remain open and airy or are shaped to form outdoor "rooms." The size and density of plants and trees should complement the size and form of the house itself in order to be effective.

Plants can also be used to replace building materials in creative ways. Hedges and bushy evergreens can be used for enclosure in lieu of fencing. Creative planting can also help to contain and protect children and animals, as well as guard against unwanted intrusion.

Babysitting class set

The American Red Cross, Tidewater Chapter, will offer a free five-week babysitting course.

Classes will be held each Tuesday, Sept. 9 through Oct. 7, from 6 to 8 p.m. at the United Way Family Center, 4441 South Boulevard, Virginia Beach.

The course, which is designed for teens age 12 and over, gives instruction in bathing, feeding, and changing babies, entertaining the older child, first aid tips, and what to do during emergencies.

Consider light carefully

In dealing with the amount of light desired on property or a building, there are several variables to consider. The use of deciduous trees, particularly those with big leaves, is one of the most elemental techniques. In the summer, when the trees are in full bloom, they absorb and screen the sun's rays, and keep the structure shaded and much cooler.

In the winter, when the leaves have been shed, light and heat are allowed to penetrate, making practical use of the sun's rays. There are also deciduous trees which do not lose all their foliage, thus providing some measure of cover even during the winter. Evergreens, on the other hand, provide a year-round shade from the sun and can be impediments to solar heating if not placed correctly.

When carefully planned, tree cover and the amount of light admitted or blocked out relate directly to the cost of heating or cooling a structure. Landscape architecture then becomes a tool of energy conservation.

Other practical functions of foliage vary from soil erosion prevention to radiation absorption. Consider again the useful evergreen which is purposely blocking out the light on one side. It also serves as a very effective wind screen and noise baffle as well as a fence. Irrespressible ivy and pachysandra perform services such as ground cover, erosion control, and radiation absorption. The practical benefits of some aesthetically dull thick-rooted plants have been proven time and again by people who uproot them and then watch their hills and cliffs gradually slide away.

Many varieties of flora

All of which is to say simply that the practical uses of the many varieties of flora should be taken into consideration from the very beginning when planning a construction or renovation. Once the basics outlined above have been considered, the architect can create infinite combinations of shape, texture, color, height, and thickness which contribute measurably. The fact that certain plants will not grow in certain parts of the country must also be carefully observed.

Just because nurseries sell them does not mean that all plants will thrive in the local climate as well as you might like. And, just as you cannot necessarily transpose a house design appreciated somewhere else to your own site, it may also be impossible to import certain varieties of plants to your local environment.

As well as all other aspects of architectural planning, your architect can work with you to insure that your needs and desire are met. It is, of course, to the architect's advantage as well as yours to have the finished project interact well with the landscape and the environment.

An outdoor living "space" which harmonizes with and complements the architecture adds a dynamic dimension to your house.

NOTICE TO PUBLIC OF PROPOSED RATE INCREASE BY CONTINENTAL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF VIRGINIA

On July 16, 1980, Continental Telephone Company of Virginia ("Continental"), filed with the State Corporation Commission of Virginia an application to increase its rates and charges for telephone service by approximately $7,695,000 annually. Continental's figures show that the new rates would increase local service revenues by approximately 19 percent. The proposed tariffs have been suspended by Commission order until December 13, 1980.

The State Corporation Commission has scheduled a public hearing on the application in its Courtroom, Blanton Building, Bank and Governor Streets, Richmond, Virginia, commencing at 10:00 a.m. on November 19, 1980. Copies of the application, together with Continental's supporting data, are available for public inspection during normal working hours at Continental's offices and in the Commission's Document Control Center located on Floor B1 of the Blanton Building, Richmond, Virginia.

On or before October 3, 1980, any person who expects to submit evidence and to cross-examine Continental and Commission witnesses must file a Notice of Protest conforming to Rule 5:16 (a) of the Commission's Rules of Practice and Procedure. A copy of this Notice must be mailed to John W. Riely, Esquire, Hunton & Williams, P.O. Box 1535, Richmond, Virginia 23212.

On or before November 5, 1980, all persons who have filed a Notice of Protest and expect to participate in the hearing as a Protestant must file with the Commission a Protest, together with ten (10) copies of all prepared testimony and exhibits of the witnesses to be offered at the hearing. Protestants must serve a copy of the Protest and testimony upon all other parties.

Any interested person (public witness) who desires to make a statement at the public hearing in his own behalf either for or against the application for increased rates, but not otherwise participate in the hearing, need only be present in the Commission's Courtroom 15 minutes prior to the commencement of the hearing and inform the Commission's Bailiff that he wishes to speak. All persons desiring to speak will be heard as expeditiously as possible, beginning at 10:00 a.m., or shortly thereafter.

All written communications to the Commission regarding this application for increased rates should be addressed to William C. Young, Clerk, Document Control Center, P.O. Box 2118, Richmond, Virginia 23216.

SUNSHINE GIRL

Waddell cools off in bathing suit.

Cooking is one of Waddell's hobbies.

A devine designer?

Her middle name is Devine. Someday she plans to start her own chain of clothes called "Devine Originals."

SUNshine Girl Melissa Devine Waddell is 19 years old, and a six year Beach resident. Originally from Chesapeake, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold G. Ferguson said she designs 90% of her own clothing.

"I'll get an idea for some clothes," she said, "and I'll either put it on paper, or go right to the sewing machine and start on it."

"I hope eventually to go to Washington, D.C. and start my own line of clothes, and later on, start a branch here in Virginia Beach."

One of three children

Waddell is one of three children. She has one other sister and a brother: Janie, 29, a nurse at Chesapeake General Hospital; and James Ferguson, 41, an electrical engineer in North Carolina.

Waddell's occupation is modeling. She also instructs it in the cities of Portsmouth, Virginia Beach, and Chesapeake.

Her hobbies include reading, sewing, riding horseback, and racquetball, "I've played a couple of years and quit," she said. "But I really like it because it's a fast sport."

She likes the Beach

Waddell says she likes the Beach but will leave it for a while to advance her fashion and modeling career, but will return.

"I like the Beach environment," she said, "I can walk to the beach during the summer; but during the winter it's really nice also; especially when I go out to dinner at the Quarterdeck and then dancing at Trix."

"I may leave the Beach for a while but I will return. It is my home."

A recreational haven!

For only one dollar a year, Virginia Beach residents may take advantage of numerous recreational activities at the Virginia Beach Recreation Center, located in the Kempsville section of the city.

During scheduled times, and under supervision, visitors may participate in various activities, including:

For all the bowlers in the area, the center features two lanes. Lane mechanic Jimmy Grassano (in coveralls) and security guard Drew Dixon practice their rolls. Grassano reports a 175 bowling average; and Dixon, a 160.

Finding out information about the upcoming bike race on Sept. 7 at Mount Trachmore, Shawn Hopkins, the seven year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Hopkins, asks Mary Balian for assistance.

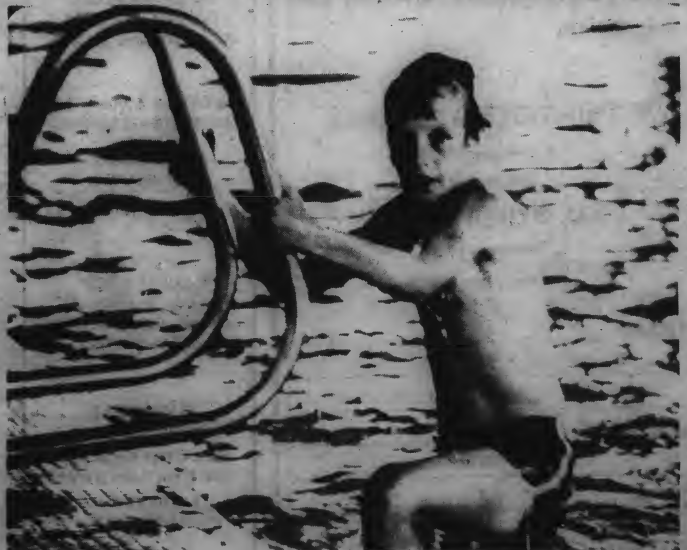

A weight room is also featured at the center. Mike Cuffee, 24, a city employee has been body building for seven years. He is shown here lifting 300 pounds universally, but says he can bench press 420 pounds.

Neckpiece #26

Neck piece displayed

"Neckpiece #26" by Mary Leu Hi demonstrates the singular malleability of silver and gold and is one of more than 200 objects which will be on view for Beach residents beginning Sept. 9 in the "Silver in American Life," an exhibition at the Virginia Museum.

Taking a swim in the center's slightly less than olympic size pool is Michael Miller, 10, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jerry K. Miller. Michael is a student at Windsor Oaks Elementary School.

Ervin says: "Don't need walkways"

Councilman Donald Merrick said the city ought to be consistent.

Hansen said the walkways could be a hazard in storms and if they are not maintained properly.

Councilman Reid Ervin said that some of the dune vegetation has to be destroyed to place a walkway.

Councilman John A. Baum said that people have gotten used to using public property.

Ervin said that the beach residents have plenty of access without constructing walkways. he added, "If you're going to remove one encroachment you have to remove them all... When you consider an encroachment is taking 15 feet of city property...."

With plantings and fences on the roadside, parking spaces are eliminated, Ervin said.

Councilman W. H. Kitchin-III said the problem is access for the public. Encroachments make public property exclusionary, he said.

Councilman Patrick L. Standing voted against denial of the Bartley request for encroachment. he said that encroachments exist all over the city.

Ervin said that the drawings used in the North Virginia Beach encroachment study can be made official for establishing a benchmark for encroachments.

City manager said that the city had originally limited itself to outlawing the obstructions in the dunes area, but would now include the bulkhead area as well.

Harris' request did not involve the beachfront, but the right of way. The fence he erected on the right of way removed a parking area from in front of his home. Neighbors complained and he was told to remove the fence. He said the residents of a house across the street

There are those who await the moment when they will be called upon to do some great thing. They waste their lives hoping for an opportunity that never comes.

I have learned that life is not composed of great events. Some come along to be sure—marriage, the birth of a child, the meeting of some great artist—but mostly, day by day, little things claim all of our attention. Suddenly we discover that one can do little things as a result of great motives.

A mother reads Bible stories every night to her little family. However tired she is, she believes that this is important and she does it. Her great motive is a belief that a knowledge of God, obtained from His word, is the single most valuable asset any child can acquire and it is best acquired when one is a child.

It is a great thing to be able to convert one's life into a fountain when one is surrounded by the thirsty—to become a nourishing piece of food when one is faced with hungry friends.

And to do all of this for the glory of God, not for the praise of men—that's a great thing—believe me!

*As is the day, so shall thy strength be.
As is the darkness, so shall thy power of sight be.
As is the danger, so shall thy courage be.*

Who will have Beach right-of-way?

owned six or seven cars and parked in front of his house and destroyed the grassed area which he maintained.

Harris said, "We have always kept up the grass, kept the 15-foot (right-of-way) in repair. We do have to protect ourselves to a certain extent." He said that he found someone using his water on one occasion. He said some residents have brick walls right on the street and would be surprised if there weren't homes on city property.

Ervin said that the city was getting more and more criticism from residents near Harris on encroachments. One put no parking signs on the public grassed area.

Ervin asked why he didn't put the fence at the edge of his property instead of on public property.

Harris said that just because somebody complained "I shouldn't have to remove mine while there are others."

Councilman Donald Merrick suggested that Harris get his neighbors together and put in curbs and gutters. In that way, the parking area would be clearly delineated from his property.

Standing said there is not one neighborhood in the city where people don't maintain property down to the street. "Why are these people being treated different?"

Ervin said, "But do those people claim they own (the right of way)?" We're talking about encroachments. With curbs you know where parking is."

Standing suggested talking about the whole city.

Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr. said, "You show us a problem like that in Kempsville and we've got to obey the law."

Harris pointed out that it would be possible to put in a 50-foot circular driveway which would remove more parking because parking isn't permitted in front of driveways.

Councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf who lives in Kempsville said, "We are not allowed to have a front fence. If you have a curb and gutter you will have a boundary."

Public Works director Oral Lambert said that the city has a policy that if anyone wants to put in curb and gutter, the owner pays for the materials and the city puts in the curb and gutters.

Harris agreed to put in curbs and gutters which led Council to grant a temporary encroachment until the work is completed.

Thayer request approved

On another encroachment matter, Council approved the request of Royal Thayer Jr., engineer, of the Lynnhaven dredging company, Inc. on behalf of four property owners in the Chelsea subdivision, for encroachments into the drainage and canal easement to construct bulkheads and piers.

A fifth request, for Randolph Savage, 1859 Duke of York Quay, was denied because the bulkhead would be placed on the 40-foot easement for the canal.

Public Works director Oral Lambert said that the canal was dug prior to the recordation of the subdivision over the existing ditch. The subdivision was recorded with a 40 foot easement on the outside edge of the Chelsea subdivision, as part of a projected 80-foot canal, but the canal in some areas is totally out of the 40-foot easement. Part of the canal is in Broad Bay Manor.

Jerry Bowman, attorney for Broad Bay, opposed the Savage encroachment because it would jeopardize the possibility of Broad Bay's asking for the canal to be relocated off Broad Bay land. The canal constructed in 1972 runs across Broad Bay's property and was not contained in the easement.

Councilman John A. Baum said the trouble rises from "putting a bulkhead in the middle of the easement—where the canal should be."

Council approved the other four encroachments for L. R. Van den Berg, Paul L. Ferrell, L. Graham Field, and F. Stanley Porter.

Virginia Beach City Councilman Patrick L. Standing asked whether it would be possible to get private enterprise interested in operating the public transit system at the Beach.

City manager George L. Hanbury said that the Beach buses have passed 100,000 riders in two months, but that it still is not profit making and more of a public convenience. He said, however, that the buses have a value beyond what the revenues indicate. With more people using the buses, the traffic pattern has improved.

He said there is not a transit system in the country that operates profitably.

Standing remarked that the public transit system is extremely expensive. The system is subsidized by Federal funds through the Southeastern Virginia Regional Transportation District and the city.

Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr. said that public transit was idle for years before the public sector took over.

Even if private enterprise took over, Hanbury said, it would expect a subsidy.

Zoning request denied

the Planning Commission, Virginia Beach City Council denied the application of Alfred V. and Judy K. Everett for change of zoning from AG-2 Agricultural District to R-8 Residential District on a 14.217 acre parcel on the north side of Old Dam Neck Road, west of Dwyer Road in the Princess Anne Borough.

Existing zoning permits 14 single family homes or agricultural related uses, while the proposed zoning allows 84 duplex units.

Edna Grimstead, representing 95 percent of the people on Old Dam Neck Road and Dwyer Road, opposed the petition. She said that development should not be allowed until roads and schools catch up. She said the traffic is unbelievable. The roads have traffic from the Atlantic Sewage Plant construction, the Malbon Pig Farm, and dump trucks hauling sand from borrow pits as well as some Navy traffic from Dam Neck.

She said half the site is below the six-foot elevation necessary for building.

City planner Robert Scott said the developer would have to take care of his own sewage.

Pneumonia kills

Up to a million Americans catch pneumococcal pneumonia each year. Persons over 65 are the most susceptible. Protection can now be obtained with a vaccine.

Shaking chills, chest pain, bloody or rust-colored sputum and high temperature are symptoms of this disease, which kills about 54,000 Americans a year.

United Way drive launched

"Our United Way fund drive goal for this year is $7.2 million for the local four city area," reports United Way group chairman and Beach native Joe Harris.

"I hope all Beach residents will contribute to a drive which goes to support over 60 organizations in the Tidewater area.

"Last year we reached our $6.6 million goal, and this year's goal reflects about a 6 percent increase. But that's not much compared to the inflation rate."

Harris said the reason to support the United Way drive is obvious.

"Just ask yourself," he said, "who do you know who has never needed blood, or had someone in their family who has not needed some sort of special attention from one of the local community organizations?"

United Way contributions are tax deductible. This year's drive ends Oct. 22. Contributions may be mailed to Four Cities United Way, 109 Main Street, Norfolk, VA, 23510.

Beacher's learn

Oil can't be squeezed

More than 300 billion barrels of crude oil, Beach residents have learned, will remain in known oil fields when they are no longer able to produce with today's methods. "This is the easiest extra oil to 'find' but the toughest to recover," explains Pete Kelly, Exxon Company, U.S.A.'s production department engineering manager.

A popular misconception holds that oil exists in large underground pools or lakes and that the wells simply suck the crude from the ground like a straw drawing soda. Unfortunately, oil is trapped in porous rock, and the reservoir holds oil more like a sponge, making recovery of a large percentage of the oil very difficult. Conventional oil production methods, on average, only recover about one-third of the oil in place.

Oil locked in fields

Oil companies have been researching "enhanced recovery" methods for years in hopes of developing processes that will recover additional oil that remains "locked" in fields at the end of their normal productive lives.

Estimates of the amount of oil which can be recovered by enhanced recovery processes vary widely. Kelly estimates that a current world oil price about 20 billion barrels may feasibly be tapped. This extra oil would increase America's remaining reserves by 70 percent and would help sustain U.S. oil production, which is currently three billion barrels per year, he says.

"But enhanced recovery methods are expensive and high risk investments because they are complex and basically unproven," Kelly says.

Enhanced recovery

Exxon is experimenting with three enhanced recovery methods:

- Thermal: Steam is injected into the reservoir to heat heavy, molasses-like crude so that it will flow.
- Miscible: A solvent such as carbon dioxide or nitrogen is injected into a reservoir to dissolve the oil.
- Chemical: Various special chemicals are injected to "wash" or push the trapped oil out of the reservoir rocks.

Projects involving all three methods are underway or planned for several U.S. oil fields. In the next few years Exxon will be spending several million dollars to see if the processes can be made to work, Kelly says.

"If we are successful in learning how to make the processes work, getting more oil out of old fields will play an important part in meeting the country's energy needs in the next three decades and could be supplying up to 10 percent of the country's crude oil needs by the year 2000," Kelly says.

TO: THE HONORABLE JUDGES OF THE COURT AFORESAID:

Your Petitioner, City of Virginia Beach, a municipal corporation of the Commonwealth of Virginia, files this Petition in accordance with Section 2.01 of the Charter of the City of Virginia Beach, Title 15.1, Chapter 18, Article 7; Title 33.1, Chapter 1, Article 7 and Title 25, Chapter 1.1, of the Code of Virginia, 1950, as amended, and such general laws as are applicable for the purpose of condemning the hereinafter described property, and represents as follows:

1. That Jay A. Richardson has been appointed the agent(s) and attorney(s) for the City of Virginia Beach and have been duly authorized to institute these condemnation proceedings and to conduct the same in the name and on behalf of the City of Virginia Beach.

2. The real property and easement(s) which are to be taken in this proceeding lie in the City of Virginia Beach, Virginia, and are described as follows:

All that certain lot, tract or parcel of land together with improvements thereon belonging, lying, situated and being in the City of Virginia Beach, Virginia and designated and described as: "PARCEL 242 TAKE AREA = 4m928.69 SQUARE FEET - 0.113 AC." as shown on that certain plat entitled: "RIGHT OF WAY ACQUISITION PLAT INDIAN RIVER ROAD PHASE II FOR CITY OF VIRGINIA BEACH" prepared by Talbot and Associates, Ltd., 100 Landmark Square, Virginia Beach, VA 23452, said plat is attached hereto and to which reference is made for a more particular description. Together with the temporary right and easement to use the additional areas shown on the attached plat for construction cut and/or fill slopes as being required for the proper execution and maintenance of work, containing 766.39 square feet. Said easement will terminate when the City grades the property adjacent to the lands to be conveyed so that there no longer exists the necessity for maintenance or until such time all construction has terminated and the City accepts the work as being completed.

3. A copy of the plat of the property owned by the defendants which is affected by this proceeding is attached hereto marked "exhibit A" and is prayed to be read as a part of this Petition. The property taken in fee simple is outlined in RED and the temporary construction easement is outline in GREEN on the plat aforesaid and are more particularly described in Paragraph 2 above.

4. The property to be taken is necessary for the construction, reconstruction, alteration, maintenance and repair of a public street or highway in the City of Virginia Beach, Virginia, known as INDIAN RIVER ROAD PROJECT, PHASE II. More specifically, this project is for the improvement of a section of said street or highway, and will include the right to construct, reconstruct, repair, improve, alter and maintain the same in accordance with the plans referred to above. The rights hereby acquired include the right to utilize the land in the future: (1) for construction, reconstruction, alteration, improvement, repair and maintenance of said street or highway; (2) for all other street, highway, and public municipal purposes, and (3) in accordance with all the rights and incidents normally acquired in the property as owner of the fee simple title thereof, with respect to the portion of said property acquired in fee simple.

5. Your petitioner has made a bona fide but ineffectual effort to acquire said property by purchase from the owner(s) thereof, but has been unable to do so because City has been unable to ascertain all of the heirs of Mary E. Gilchrist.

6. Your petitioner is of the opinion that the only persons who are entitled to an interest in the compensation to be ascertained in this proceeding are: the heirs of the Estate of Mary E. Gilchrist.

WHEREFORE, your Petitioner respectfully prays to this Honorable Court in accordance with the provisions of Title 25, Chapter 1.1 of the Code of Virginia, 1950, as amended, that commissioners may be summoned and appointed to ascertain and report the value of the land taken and damages, if any, which may accrue to the remaining property of the owner(s) beyond the enhancement in value, if any, to such other property by reason of the taking and use; that the Court direct that all other steps be taken to carry out the intents of Title 25, Chapter 1.1 and Title 33.1, Chapter 1, Article 7, of the Code of Virginia, 1950, as amended, as may be necessary; and that the petitioner may have such other, further and general relief as the nature of its case may require.
